Eva J. Simon Passes On

School Teacher and Civic Worker for Many Years

The sudden death of Miss Eva J. Simon on Tuesday evening, from an attack of heart failure, was a shock to her many friends in this community.

Miss Simon was born in New Hyde Park 62 years ago, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Simon, pioneer settlers.

She was one of the original members of the Sunday school established before the organization of the First Reformed Church, later becoming a teacher in the primary department, and was for several years superintendent of the Sunday school.

She was a charter member of the church upon its organization, where she worshipped and continued active in its affairs until the time of her demise.

After her graduation at the Jamaica High School, Miss Simon taught a school in Springfield. She then became a teacher in the old school on New Hyde Park Road, and when the new school was built on Jericho Turnpike she taught there for some years.

Many of our older residents recall the days when they sat under her tutorage, and without an exception, they testi to her worth as a teacher, and appreciate the kindly advice and assistance given to them.

Twenty-two years ago she became a teacher in the Mineola school where she gave efficient service until the day of her death.

She was always interested in civic affairs, and was one of the organizers of the Women's Civic Association, and for many years has been the president of the U. S. Flag Association.

Funeral services will be held today at two o'clock, at her late home, where she lived with her sister-in-law, Mrs. Antoinette Simon, in the old Herkomer mansion, at the corner of Millers Lane and First Avenue, opposite the railroad station, the Rev. David C. Weidner officiating. Interment will follow in the family plot in the Elmont Presbyterian Cemetery.

Two brothers, John Simon, of Queens, and George Simon, of Westchester, survive her.

2 - Anton Herkomer

Among the million and a half German immigrants who came to this country before the Civil War were the brothers Herkomer. We do not know why they left Germany, and we do not know why they wound up in Hyde Park. Maybe they met and got to know Mrs. Charlotte Henderson, and she urged them to establish themselves in this little hamlet. She is somewhat of a mystery. We do not know anything of her husband, but her name pops up all over the maps as a large property owner. She probably wanted to sell off some parcels and therefore urged the Herkomer brothers to settle here. She sold them property, which was a very large parcel, with boundaries from Jericho Turnpike south to what is now 2nd Avenue and from Millers Lane east to Herkomer Street. She also held the mortgage on it.

Of the three Herkomer brothers, one was a wood carver, the other a sculptor, but it is the third, Anton Herkomer, who had an impact on the future of Hyde Park. He was a weaver with his own establishment and had quite a reputation as a creator of exquisite brocades. He was the one who urged the Christ brothers to leave New York City and move out here. There was already a little inn on his property and a small house next door. The brothers Christ bought the inn and the house in 1869. Anton Herkomer paid off the mortgage to Mrs. Henderson, and Elizabeth Christ was in possession of the satisfaction.

The few families who lived in the area knew each other and naturally they intermarried. One of the Simon boys married Antoinette Herkomer and lived in the old Herkomer homestead on the corner of what is now Millers Lane and 2nd Avenue and houses now the annex to the Post office.

Antoinette Herkomer Simon's sister-in-law, Eve Simon, lived with them. She was single and though she supported herself, it was unthinkable at that time for an unmarried women to live alone. Women were expected to marry, and there were very few career opportunities open to them. They could go into service as maids, cooks or governesses, or they could be nurses, secretaries or teachers. Although there was a drawback to that–once a teacher got married, she lost her job.

Eva Simon became a teacher. All the qualification one needed at that time was a High School Diploma. When Eva was a teacher in New Hyde Park, she was a presence. Besides teaching school, she also taught Sunday School at the First Reformed Church and she lived in the village. One could meet her in the streets. There wasn't much one could do to punish children, but there was at that time so much respect and even fear of authority, that children behaved most of the time. Their offenses were just minor: not doing their homework, pulling girls braids, being noisy, using foul language, or getting into fights.

There are no more Herkomers in New Hyde Park, and many of the early business establishments do not exist anymore. Only the Christ plumbing store is still standing on that plot of ground that Anton Herkomer once owned.

3 - Emanuel and John Christ

The two Christ brothers who landed in the United States were born in Germany. The older one John C. Christ in 1827 and the younger one Emanuel Christ in 1840. The family were artisans, but because only the eldest son inherited the business, the younger ones were apprenticed to different trade people to learn a craft with which they eventually could make a living. John Christ became a machinist. Emanuel was really versatile; he learned to be a blacksmith, wheelwright and to operate a lumber mill. But that was not all. As he seemed to be smart, the family decided to have him study for the catholic priesthood. While at the seminary, he met and fell in love with a young girl by the name of Elizabeth Joerz, and the two of them wanted to marry. Of course there were obstacles, not the least the disgrace they would bring to their families. Emanuel confided in his older brother John who was already married at the time, and the two plotted a course of action. At that time, America was on everybody's mind. There was a severe labor shortage in the USA, and companies had agents in Europe to recruit workers to come to the States. At the same time, the European governments were quite repressive. Therefore to escape all the restrictions and in many cases the draft into the military, countless Germans, Scandinavians and many other nationalities emigrated to the United States. So it was not surprising that Emanuel wanted to leave his homeland. He and Elizabeth eloped to Paris where they were married. His brother John and sister-in-law Rosina decided to join them, and together they sailed for America. A young friend of theirs by the name of Philip Miller was bitten by "Wander Lust," and, as it is easier to face the unknown in the company of some familiar people, he attached himself to the two couples and came with them across the ocean.

In 1864, they landed in New York City and first lived on 26th Street. Their financial status is not known, but the brothers found immediate employment at their crafts and seemed to make a good living, which could not be said of each and every immigrant. The economy always had its ups and downs and, as there were no safety nets, many people suffered greatly during an economic downturn. The mechanical skills of the brothers Christ were greatly in demand, so much so that they were persuaded by a satisfied customer of their boss to terminate their employment and follow him to the hamlet of Hyde Park. That man was Anton Herkomer, who owned weaving looms that not only had to be repaired but needed new parts for the different weaving patterns. Therefore, he liked to have the brothers Christ nearby. They were at first hesitant, but Anton Herkomer was very persuasive and tried to convince them that they not only would be able to make a good living, but that life in the country would be much healthier and of course cheaper, as they eventually would be able to grow some of their own food.

In 1864, transportation was greatly improved. The steam age had arrived! There was the railroad, which was quite a marvel with its great locomotives and eased travel across the country. But to come to Hyde Park from New York City, one first had to take the ferry across the East River where there was a Railroad Station. Then by railroad to Hinsdale (now Floral Park) and from there by horse and wagon the mile over the plank road to Hyde Park. The trip took almost a day and, as there were no McDonald's or Burger Kings, one had to provide for his own sustenance.

The brothers Christ decided on the move. Anton Herkomer, in addition to his looms, owned property along Jericho Turnpike and the Hyde Park Inn (now Arland Printing). The mortgage on those properties was held by Mrs. Henderson. The Christs along with Emanuel's young son Conrad, at first, lived for a short time at the Hyde Park Inn. Soon they were well established to buy their own places. John bought the Inn itself and a house on the other corner (now Henry's Inn), where he opened a grocery store. Emanuel bought the property next to the Inn, which is now 1310 Jericho Turnpike.

The Great Fire of 1880

One of the most traumatic events and one all the inhabitants, without exception, were to remember for the rest of their lives was the fire of 1880. Calamity struck on Christmas Eve, December 24, 1880.

A FIRE, which destroyed most of the business section of Hyde Park.

A FIRE, which wiped out not only some personal mementos, but possessions which took years of hard work to acquire.

A FIRE, which left families homeless and destitute.

A TRAGEDY! A terrible disaster!

Who was to blame? Blacksmiths had to work with fire, and that's where it started–at the blacksmith shop of Emanuel Christ at 8 p.m. Christmas was about to be celebrated. The older girls had the house cleaned and the floors scrubbed on their knees. food was prepared and the seasonal specialties baked. All was ready, and the children were excited with expectations. The winter had only started, so the cellar was almost full with provisions: potatoes, carrots, canned fruits and vegetables and some smoked meats. All that–the flames consumed. The Christ families, Emanuel's and John's, were able to carry out some furniture, but the fire spread rapidly and destroyed the shop and the house of Emanuel. spread to the adjoining Inn of John Christ, destroying the harness shop, the sheds, the stables and another building which was used as a cigar factory. Everything became a pile of ashes. There was no fire protection at that time.

Hyde Park Business Section Ravaged by Fire

Most of the business section of (New) Hyde Park was destroyed by fire Dec. 22, 1880. The fire started about eight o'clock in the morning in the blacksmith shop of E. C. Christ. There was no fire apparatus in the village and the strong wind fanned the flames and soon the harness factory next door was on fire.

The fire burned fiercely and within half an hour after it was discovered they were in flames, in addition to the first two buildings, a hotel, the proprietor's house adjoining it, the sheds and stables and another building, the upper floor of which was used for a cigar factory.

The occupants of the building, finding themselves powerless to check the spread of the flames, turned their attention to saving as much as possible of their furniture and goods.

All the buildings destroyed by fire were owned by John Christ. The loss amounting to $6,000 was partly covered by insurance.

The flames burned unchecked, fanned by a strong wind, and the Christs could do nothing but watch, standing in the snow-covered street shivering and overcome by emotion, but still grateful, for there was no loss of life.

The buildings owned by John and Emanuel were partly covered by insurance, but there was a more pressing need–to find shelter, food and clothing. But people in Hyde Park always came to the aid of the disadvantaged. They took the families into their own houses and helped as much as they could, knowing the same would be done for them if disaster should strike.

We don't know where Emanuel, his wife and their eight children were housed at the time. Maybe they had to split up and live with several families. The houses at that time were not spacious, children didn't have their own room, or even their own bed. Only the kitchens and parlors were heated. Children close in age and of the same sex were put into one bed, two or sometimes three together. They took that arrangement for granted; it kept them warm, they always had company and didn't need a "security blanket." Besides, they didn't know better and considered their childhood a happy one.

After the fire, farmers and neighbors took up a collection and donated enough food and building supplies, so that within two years all the dwellings were rebuilt. As of this writing, the residence and store of Emanuel are still standing though there is no more blacksmith shop. For more than a hundred years, from 1867 until 1984, a Christ was living and working there.

Mrs. Ellen Dyckman, of Garden City Park, remembers well this fire. She had several hundred chickens in one of the sheds, and they were all destroyed in the fire.

1996 - 1310 Jericho Turnpike.

Today there is a new owner, but although times are changing and young people have to be given a chance to do it their way, the store and building at 1310 Jericho Turnpike seem to resist too much of a change. John Brown, the new owner, is the son and a grandson of a native of New Hyde Park, was himself born here, resides here and just wants to hang on to some of the old traditions.

4 - Emanuel Christ Family

After settling in Hyde Park, Emanuel kept on working with his hands and became successful even though he didn't measure success by the amount of money he accumulated. Although at times the going was rough. There was the great depression in 1873 which lasted until 1877 and the neighboring farmers, who patronized Christ had no money to pay their bills. The farmers on the north side of Jericho Turnpike were C. Kelsy, P. Wiggins, S. Hegeman, W. Ingraham, Taft and C. Denton. Food was no problem as everyone kept a kitchen garden, along with ducks, geese and pigs.

It was hard going for Emanuel. He too had to meet his obligations to his creditors and to his growing family. In 1873 he was already the proud father of 5 children. All in all 12 children were born to Emanuel and Elizabeth. Two died at child birth, but 10 survived, thrived, became responsible adults and all lived well past their sixties, which is almost a miracle, considering the sanitary conditions of the time. There were setbacks: the fire in 1880 and another depression in 1890 coupled with a drought. Through frugality and back breaking hard work, Emanuel managed to expand his business. In addition to remaining a blacksmith, he became a manufacturer and dealer in wagons and buggies and sold harness, stoves and other farm implements. He also ran a sawmill and had a general store right in his house where Elizabeth was helping out.

Emanuel was very much involved in the community and cared about the well being of its inhabitants. As he was helped, so in turn he helped others. He taught his children hard work and self reliance. He passed away in 1908.

OBITUARY.

Emanuel Christ.

Emanuel Christ, a well known and respected merchant of Hyde Park, an uncle of Supervisor Philip J. Christ, died Sunday, aged 68 years. He leaves a widow and ten children, four sons and six daughters. He was a native of Germany and came to America many years ago on his honeymoon, settling in Hyde Park. Funeral services were held on Wednesday.

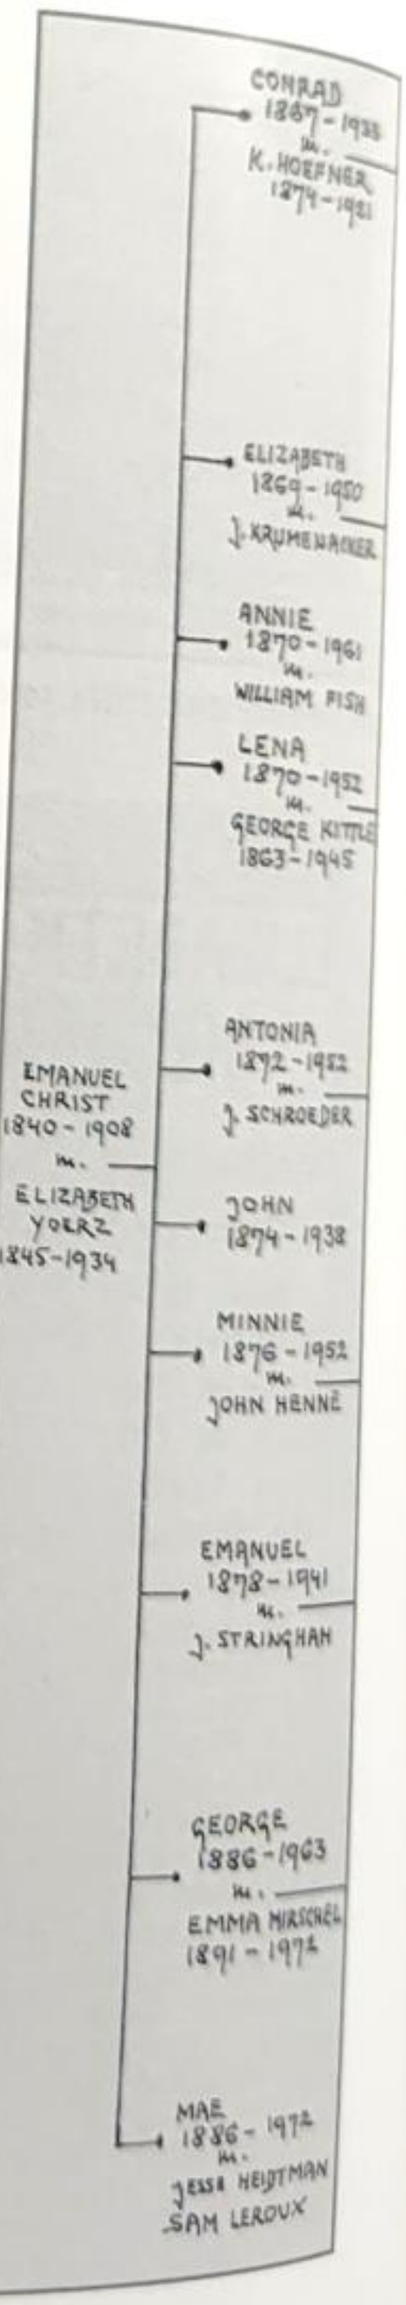
1887 - Emanuel Christ Family: (l-r) John, Emanuel Sr., Conrad, Emanuel Jr., Annie, Lena, Minnie, and Elizabeth seated holding twins Mae and George. Emanuel Christ residence and shop built in 1881, now 1310 Jericho Turnpike.



Children of Emanuel and Elizabeth Christ

Conrad Christ, the eldest, met his wife Kate Hoeffener in Fosters Meadow (now Elmont) where he was schooled and was married at St. Boniface Catholic Church in 1896. He moved to Westbury where he built wagons and buggies and was an artist in making ornamental iron work. One can still admire the large beautiful gates he created for the rich people in Old Westbury. His son and his grandson followed in his footsteps and were wood and iron workers. It was his son Emanuel who was the only Christ to serve his country in World War I.

Elizabeth Christ, born in 1868, married John Krumenacker, a builder, lived in Floral Park. After John built 2 houses on Lakeville Road in New Hyde Park (one for himself and one for his daughter), they moved back to New Hyde Park. Their daughter Bethel married Earl Smith who was the Assistant Postmaster of Floral Park. Their son Carl established the Bedford Oil Co. in Floral Park.

Annie Christ, born in 1870, married William Fish, who managed a political organization, The Queens Club, and they lived in Queens Village. Their 2 children are William and Grace.

Lena Christ, born in 1870, who was Annie Christ's twin sister, married George Kittle, a seed store owner in Mobile, Alabama. The Kittles had three children Howard, Sterling and Corrine. There are about 35 living descendants of the Kittle's living in Alabama and Tennessee.

Antonia Christ, born in 1872, married Leon Krieg and had a son named Leo. After her husband's death she married John Schroeder and had two more children named Mae and John. They live on the island in the Huntington-Commack area.

John Christ, born in 1874, married and lived in Rockville Center. He is divorced, has two sons. He was a wheelwright and a wagon builder for the dry goods stores of Batterman and Wannemaker in Brooklyn.

Minnie Christ, born in 1876, married a potato farmer, John Henne and moved to Hicksville where they had a farm on Newbridge Road. Their two daughters, Lillian and Antonette married and lived their entire lives in Hicksville.

Emanuel Christ, Jr., born in 1878, married Jennie Stringham, lived and worked in Hempstead where he owned a Machine Shop. His two sons, William and Alfred built bodies for fire engines and they were the ones who invented the starting gates for the race tracks which still are used for all the horse races. He had two daughters Anna and Jennette.

Mae Christ, born in 1886, the youngest one, lived all her life in New Hyde Park. She first married Jess Heidtman who was a builder and had a contract for the first Firehouse in New Hyde Park. He failed to finish it and misappropriated some funds. Therefore, he ran off to Canada and joined their army. Mae got a divorce and a job in Floral Park where she worked at the Shepleman and Ramee drug-stores. She enjoyed that greatly as she not only dispensed some medicines but even medical advise which was appreciated by the customers. Later she married Sam Leroux and lived on South 13th Street.

George E. Christ, born in 1886, was a twin to Mae. He lived his entire life in Hew Hyde Park, married Emma Mirschell and had four children.

his life. When he was 6 years old, the first MacAdam Road replaced the wooden plank road. MacAdam invented the road building material by mixing crushed stones, tar and sand. It was new and modern and endlessly fascinating to a young boy who could watch everything close up. He felt like being in a magic world and years and years later he still talked about his impressions of that time.

He had to start school which by our standards was primitive, but the children did get an education. They learned the 3 R's quite well and young George enjoyed reading. Later in life, besides the newspaper, he subscribed to the Readers Digest and though he read the National Geographic from cover to cover, he never had a desire to travel.

In Emanuel's household the emphasis was on work. That is: Labor. Everyone had his chores and very early young George was reminded to help Pop. And help he did. He learned how to use tools and later how to shoe horses and run the various machines. He was still a teenager when he, with his older brother Emanuel Jr., started a bicycle repair shop. Business was thriving, but times were changing. Young George kept pace and went to a Brooklyn Trade School to learn the "Sanitary Plumbing" trade. In 1890 the first gas pipes were installed in the streets and now gas lighting in homes was possible. His first plumbing job was to drive a pipe into the ground and install a pump. In 1910 the Jamaica Water Supply Co. started to lay pipes and for the first time people in New Hyde Park could have running water in their homes. By that time young George's life had changed. He was a carefree young boy, but when in 1908 his father died, he had the responsibility of providing for his mother and he started to take an active part in the community. When in 1910 the Active Hook and Ladder Co. was organized, he was a charter member of our fire protection company.

For fun and socializing, he frequented the Nick Reuter dance hall, corner of Millers lane and 2nd Avenue. There he met his future wife: a cheerful fun loving young lady. She was the daughter of the prominent builder Carl Mirschel of Munson (now West Hempstead), and George went courting with a horse and buggy built by his father. Emma Mirschel and George exchanged their marriage vows on June 5, 1912, at the Lutheran Church in Hempstead. A big reception was held at her fathers residence in Munson. They went by train to Niagara Falls to spend their honeymoon and were driven to the Garden City Station in great style by car. The only automobile around at the time was owned by Wilfred Bowen, who provided the newlyweds with that ultra modern transportation. Elizabeth Christ considered herself fortunate to have Emma for a daughter-in-law and when first a daughter Bethel was born on Feb. 23, 1913, and George Jr. on July 29, 1915, she was only too glad to help out. The two younger children Carl M. were born in 1922 and Carol Mae 1925. George did well at his business, but with all the ups and downs in the economy, he looked for additional ventures. His father-in-law was his role model. Carl Mirschell built in 1906 the school building on Jericho Turnpike and New Hyde Park Road and about 100 homes in the Hempstead area. When George became his son-in-law, he gave him the contract for all the plumbing and heating installations.

George went into the building trade himself. In New Hyde Park, he owned property and built houses on North 10th, North 12th Streets and Jericho Turnpike and several in Floral Park. Later his partner was Charles Weckerle, and they built several houses in the Covert Park area.

My father was very busy, worked hard and thought he had it made. Then the depression hit. There were neither buyers nor renters for the houses, but real estate taxes had to be paid and my father saw his accumulated wealth dwindle away. But he never gave up the plumbing business and the family survived the depression. Through all that time, he continued to participate in community affairs. In 1933 he ran for Village Trustee and was elected. He served for 4 years and was appointed Building Inspector and served for 2 years. While he was Trustee, the Village Board decided on the acquisition of the school building for the sum of $25,000. Besides being an ex-fireman, his membership in various organizations included the Board of Trade, New Hyde Park Civic Association and the Masons.

As I said: the depression was hard on the family. The buildings were a drain and there were few jobs for a blacksmith or a plumber. My father decided to go into the plumbing supply business and incorporated Feb. 1938. Once the F.H.A. was formed and people could get loans, business picked up for a few years until I had to leave for the army. Due to the war effort, merchandise was scarce and when I returned home in 1945 the business had changed again. There was a shortage of plumbing supplies and, in order to fill a need, my father started to sell used merchandise. By this time the bulk of our customers were homeowners who were forced to do their own repairs, and we not only supplied them with parts but also with instructions. My brother Carl joined us in the business, and it stayed the same even after my father's death in 1963, until in 1984 a new owner took over.

George lived all his life in the same house, though over the years it has seen some changes. There was indoor plumbing, a bathroom, gas and electricity and central heating. The year 1963 was very different from 1886. There were roads and the automobile. Medicine was greatly changed. We had a cure for polio and had satellites in space. The young George was fascinated by everything new and modern. The old George turned his back on progress. When he died there was no telephone in his house. But we have to judge people by what they are and not by their possessions. George Christ was an honest, upright, fascinating man and I am proud to call him my father.

Emma V. Christ

As mentioned before, my mother Emma was fun loving and full of life. She loved people and always had countless friends. No matter who came to the house, they had to sit down and share a meal with the family. There never was any lack of company, as grandma's numerous offspring, their spouses and children came regularly for a visit. When the depression hit, many family members fell on hard times, lost everything and my parents took them in. We children just loved having all the people in the house and the two girls, Bethel and Carol, benefited. An uncle who lived with us built them a beautiful dollhouse. Many times cousins stayed for long periods and we, the four children, spent the summers in Bayville where an aunt owned a summer cottage. We went swimming, boating and clam digging and everyday there was clam chowder. All remember a most happy and wonderful time, but can't recall the crowded conditions in the tiny bungalow.

Emma Christ and daughter Bethel

The strength of a community depends on many people and my mother made her contributions too. She was most active at her church the First Reformed Church of New Hyde Park where she was a very successful fundraiser. Having had a brother in World War I, she was eligible to join the auxiliary of the American Legion and eventually became the President. When her children became of school age, she joined the PTA and there too became President. She was active in civic organizations and participated in the drive for the first Library in New Hyde Park. She had great empathy for people, was affected and saddened at their misfortunes and tried to help where she could. Like in every life there were some ups and downs: the depression for one. Then both her sons served in World War II which naturally worried her and in 1949 my father suffered a heart attack. He survived and my mother and father celebrated their 50th Wedding Anniversary amongst family and friends. The highlight of the celebration was a play about their life, written and performed by their grandchildren.

After my father's death in 1963, my mother remained in the house at 1310 Jericho Turnpike, although it was empty by now. Every Sunday, living in their own homes. One summer Sunday, she came home from church and, while making tea, her scarf caught fire and she was severely burned. She died on July 15, 1972, and was mourned by all the community.

Children of George E. Christ. Sr. and Emma V. Christ

Bethel Christ Wieser

The oldest child of George and Emma Christ was born February 23, 1913. Her childhood was not different from that of all the other children in the neighborhood. Numerous friends and cousins were around to play with. She attended grade school in New Hyde park and high school in Hempstead. After graduation she enrolled in a private secretarial school where she did very well. Her first job was at the Library in New Hyde Park and later she worked at the Bank of New Hyde Park. She was active in the auxiliary of the American Legion. In 1940 she met and married a young Swiss banker, Henry Wieser. They moved into a house on North 12th St. built by her father. When hostilities broke out, Henry, who was now a U.S. citizen, was drafted into the army and spent the war years overseas. Meanwhile, Bethel took a job with the Sperry Corp. After Henry's return home, their two daughters Linda and Pamela were born. They moved to a larger house in Garden City, spent some years in Switzerland and now live in California.

Carl Mirschel Christ

The younger son of George and Emma Christ was born February 19, 1922. His childhood was exciting because there were so many young people of his age around at that time. He went to the New Hyde Park Road school and after graduation from Sewanhaka High School enrolled at Hofstra College. He entered the military and served in Europe during World War II with the Air Force as a Lieutenant. After returning he joined his father's business. His activities in the Village included membership in the American Legion and the New Hyde Park Civic Association where he became the President. He was a Nassau County Republican Committeeman and later left his father's business to take a job in the Nassau County Highway Dept. as an inspector. He is married to Edna Whaley and they have two daughters: Cheryl and Cathy. Carl retired from the county position and lives now in Stony Brook, LI, NY.

Carol Mae Christ Freeman

Carol born April 8, 1925, was the youngest child of George and Emma Christ. She attended the New Hyde Park Road School and Sewanhaka High School and after graduation, like her older sister Bethel, enrolled in a secretarial school and landed a job as Executive Secretary in Sperry Corp. Carol married Omar Freeman who spent the war years in the Navy. After returning home, he started a Body and Fender Shop at 1 North 12th Street. They had an opportunity to buy a moviehouse and moved to Iowa, where both their children Vicki and Laurie were born. Eventually they moved back to Long Island, live in Garden City and still run a movie theater business. Carol was a member of the American Legion Auxiliary and assisted her brother George, while he was chairman of the Cultural Commission of New Hyde Park.

After settling in Hyde Park in 1867, John (1827-1885) stopped working as a machinist and devoted his time to running an inn and grocery store. John Christ was a community activist, responsible for the drive to establish a Post Office and he became the first Postmaster in New Hyde Park. He was helped in his ventures by Philip Miller, who followed him to Hyde Park and lived with him. John was only 58 years old when he died and his only child, Philip, was 13. He was mourned by the whole community. John's son Philip and grandson Marcus were so active and well known in the community, that almost everyone still living in New Hyde Park is familiar with their achievements. Amongst the most important ones: Philip became supervisor of the Town of North Hempstead and, after serving for three years, was chairman of the Nassau County Board of Supervisors for ten years. Marcus became a judge and was appointed to the Appellate Division of the State of New York and therefore the most distinguished citizen of New Hyde Park. Today, great-grandchildren of John Christ are judges, lawyers or prominent in the business world.

1880 - Originally built by John J. Christ at 1218 Jericho Turnpike as a one-story building to house the grocery store and Post Office. The Postmaster at the time was Rosina Christ with son Philip as assistant. After the death of John Christ in 1885, his widow Rosina married Philip Miller the following year. He added a second story with a very spacious room and called it Miller's Hall. The hall was used as a dance hall and a meeting place for three local churches, the Fire Department, and several other organizations.

Biography of Philip J. Christ

by Marcus G. Christ

Of those who by progressive enterprise and the use of sound business methods and principles have continued to confirm the long-established good repute of the mercantile portion of the history of New Hyde Park, and Nassau County, Philip J. Christ has been a factor both in the direction of his own business concerns and in the management of those official positions that are the gift of the people. His father had been one of the old time merchants here, and made a record of high value as store-keeper and townsman, and his son has not only followed in his footsteps of probity, but has won other laurels for general enterprise and upright dealing. Landmarks of business in which Mr. Christ and his parents have been engaged, are those grocery houses that have borne their name, and which have been popular centers of merchandising for years; while the Long Island Seed Company and its immediate [illegible]essor have become widely known for capable m[illegible]gement. In many official places, as well, Mr. Christ has proven the qualities of leadership and of managem[illegible] for mutual good. He is a son of John C. Christ, who came to New Hyde Park from New York City in [illegible]7, and died here in 1885.

Philip J. Christ was born at New Hyde Park, New York, April 25, 1872. He received his education in the public schools of his birthplace and in the high school of Jamaica, New York. After his schooling, he immediately entered upon the grocer's business with his father, and after the death of the latter, Mrs. Christ continued the business at the same stand for a period of sixteen years, assisted by her son. In 1901, Philip J. Christ established the business known as the Long Island Seed Company, and so continued until 1909; his stock being a general line of seeds and of garden implements. Then, with a store under his own name, he continued as a merchant in the seed and potato business up to 1913. Meantime in 1892, he had been appointed postmaster at New Hyde Park, New York, a position that his father had occupied previously. Successively, he was chosen to other places of trust throughout the different townships, as when in 1899, he was elected receiver of taxes in the Town of North Hempstead in which position he served for two years. Resigning in 1904, he was elected President of the Board of Education of New Hyde Park. He resigned that office in 1907, to take the position of Supervisor of North Hempstead, serving thus for ten years, resigning voluntarily. He was elected in 1911 as Chairman of the Board of Supervisors of the Country, serving until his retirement from public office.

Mr. Christ has been actively identified with the Democratic Party all of his career, and served as Chairman of the Democratic County Committee for twenty years; Mr. Christ was also a member of the Hudson-Fulton Commission. He is a member of the Charter Commission of Nassau County, and a member and Vice-President of the Board of Child Welfare, of Nassau County. On May 1, 1919, he joined the incorporated firm of Clark, Christ and McKellar, a real estate and insurance corporation, a connection which continued until May, 1924, when he was elected Vice-President and General Manager of the National Bank of Mineola. During the World War, he served as a member of the draft board and was also active in organizing the Bank of New Hyde Park of which he is President.

Fraternally, he is affiliated with Lodge No. 878, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is a communicant of the Roman Catholic Church at New Hyde Park.

Mr. Christ married June 6, 1899, Anna Gottsch, of Brooklyn, NY and they are the proud parents of Marcus G. Christ, a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania and the Harvard Law School; and of Charlotte B. Christ, a senior at Elmira College, at Elmira, New York.

Mrs. Anna Christ, Mother of Court Justice

New Hyde Park — Mrs. Anna Gottsch Christ, the mother of Associate Justice Marcus G. Christ of the State Supreme Court Appellate Division, died yesterday at her home, 15 Millers Lane, following a prolonged illness. She was 85.

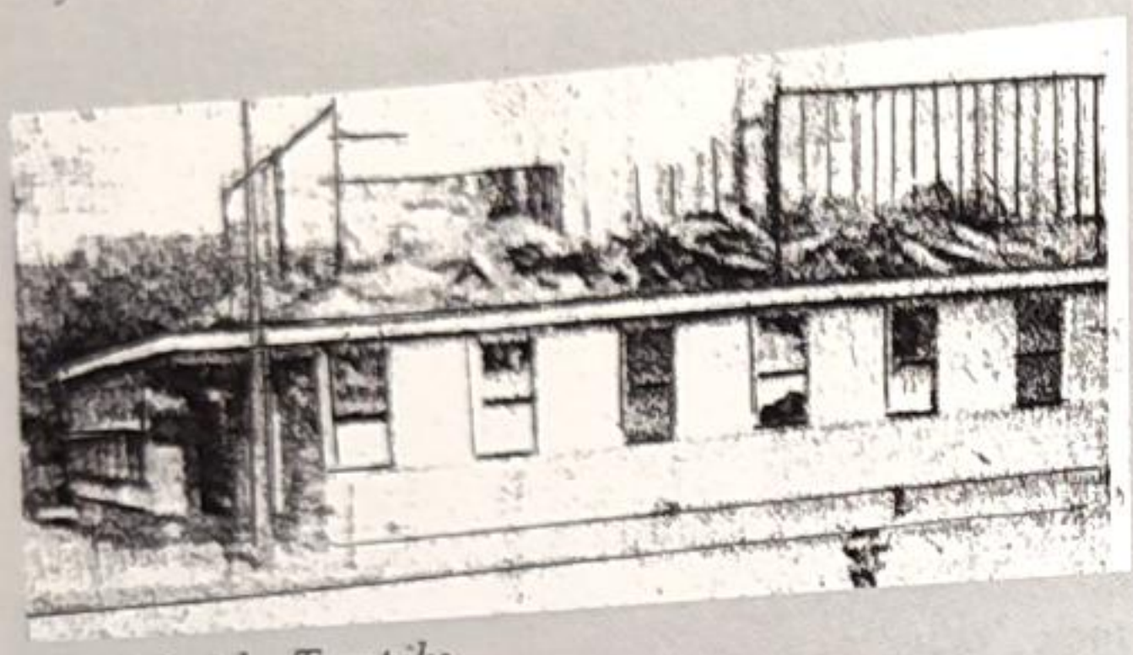
Born in Brooklyn, Mrs. Christ was active for more than two generations in the civic and social affairs of New Hyde Park. She was the founder and first president of the Parent-Teachers Association, and a charter member and vice president of the Garden City-Hempstead Woman's Community Club. She also was active in the Nassau Chapter of the American Red Cross during its early days.

Mrs. Christ was the widow of the late North Hempstead Town Supervisor Philip J. Christ, who died in 1933. Christ had served on the board of supervisors of the county from 1907-17 and was its last Democratic chairman previous to the election of County Executive Nickerson.

In addition to her son, she is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Gerard H. Hughes of Garden City, eight grandchildren and 15 great-grandchildren. The body is reposing at Fairchild's Funeral Home in Garden City. Funeral services will be held there at 3 PM Sunday with private burial services at Greenfield Cemetery, Hempstead.

Passing of a Landmark

By Anna Christ



1300 Jericho Turnpike

John C. Christ, my husband's father, came to Long Island in 1868 because of his health and settled in New Hyde Park which was then "Real Country" with woods, fields and hills. Today, no one can visualize that. Gone are the horses, the cows, the farm wagons and carriages. Gone are the people who lived their semi-rural lives in this town and laid the foundations of our community. To one who saw New Hyde Park (which by the way was the original Hyde Park; the one on the Hudson River came later and we were forced to add the word New to our name.), there is a nostalgic sadness in seeing one of the last of the old landmarks being torn down. The structure, pictured above, at Jericho Turnpike and Miller's Lane was a small, wooden building in 1868 and it was in this building that John C. Christ opened a retail grocery store. There was a need for such an establishment and the folks for miles around came to buy their weekly supplies. Hinsdale (Floral Park) was half an hour away by horse and buggy. Jericho Turnpike was a log road and I can sometimes on a cold clear night, hear the creak of farm wagon wheels in my imagination, as they bumped along over this, corduroy highway. The L.I.R.R. started at Flushing and ended at Babylon. There was no main line through this area. Farmers and merchants traveled along Jericho Turnpike as far as Huntington. Some merchants came from far off Brooklyn and this necessitated a stop-over. And so, the little retail store blossomed into a small hotel with the meals being cooked by Mrs. Christ. Mr. Philip Miller, a boyhood friend and classmate of Mr. Christ then came into the business, and the building was enlarged and a front and side porch was added. Mr. Miller's hobby was gardening, and he established an outdoor garden that was a thing of beauty. The need for a Post Office was felt and Mr. Christ wrote to Washington but his request was turned down. He then wrote to folks in Brooklyn and New York and had hundreds of people write letters to him. Washington saw that a need existed and established the Hyde Park Post Office in the hotel, with Mr. Christ as its first Postmaster. The business flourished so that a larger building was needed to take care of the demand for groceries and general supplies. It was built by Mr. Miller in 1885 and is known as Walter's Inn. When Mr. Christ died, Mr. Miller married his widow and thus, the former Mrs. J. C. Christ became Mrs. Philip Miller. The automobile was beginning to emerge. The Vanderbilt Cup Races were held along Jericho Turnpike around 1905. Bicycling too became the rage and cyclists from Brooklyn started at Prospect Park Circle and made a "century" run to the Christ-Miller Hotel in Hyde Park. Even in those days there were "speeders". They were known as "scrochers" who exceeded the limit of 10 miles per hour. Big events were strawberry festivals and medicine shows and many organizations and several churches were organized at the meetings held in the new Miller Building (now Walter's Inn). The old order changeth. With the death of Mrs. Miller, the property was sold to Mr. F. Garvey and eventually became an automobile showroom. Gone with the wind are the good old days of relaxed living, the smell of new-mown hay, the chomp of contented horses at their evening meal and the mooing of cows and the cackle of the hens. Gone too is Mr. Miller's pride and joy, the garden and flowers. Having seen both the old and the new, I wonder whether we have traded these times of peace, contentment and comfort. Mr. Garvey eventually sold the property and after numerous changes it became known as the Carol Inn, which for the past four years had stood empty and forlorn, a mockery of it's former glory. As this is written the gaunt skeleton of the old hotel is being carted away and nothing but rubble remains. Thus, an old landmark passes and with its going marks the end of an era too.

Marcus G. Christ

Autobiography written for the dedication of Marcus G. Christ Hall. Sunday, May 21, 1978.

Marcus G. Christ

Marcus G. Christ retired as an Associate Justice of the Appellate Division for the Second Judicial Department on August 1, 1976, completing a judicial career which began in 1928, when he served as Police Justice of the Village of New Hyde Park, the Long Island community where he has lived all his life. Justice Christ still resides at 5 Millers Lane, the house in which he was born on April 7, 1900.

Ingraham Lane residence of Marcus G. Christ, before moving to Millers Lane.

There is a strong tradition of public service in the Christ family. The Judge's father, the late Philip J. Christ, was the elected supervisor of the Town of North Hempstead from 1907 to 1917, and was chosen as Chairman of the Nassau County Board of Supervisors in 1910, a position he held for the remainder of his tenure as supervisor. In addition, one of the Judge's four children, Marcus Hallsted, is now the elected comptroller of Nassau County.

Justice Christ went on to serve as a Deputy County Attorney of Nassau County and then as County Attorney before commencing 26 years in major courts with his appointment in 1950 by the late Governor Thomas E. Dewey, as a Judge of the Nassau County Court. In those years, the County Judge doubled as Judge of the then existent Children's Court and also filled in on occasion for the Surrogate.

In 1953, he was elected a Justice of the Supreme Court of the State of New York. In 1959, Justice Christ was appointed an Associate Justice of the Appellate Division by Governor Nelson A. Rockefeller. Upon the death of Presiding Justice George Beldock in March 1970, Governor Rockefeller appointed him to the position of Presiding Justice, in which high judicial office he also served as a member of the Administrative Board of the Judicial Conference, the policy making and administrative agency for the State court system.

Under the provision of the New York State Constitution which mandates the retirement of a judge at the age of 70, Judge Christ retired as Presiding Justice. However, he was again appointed an Associate Justice of the Appellate Division by Governor Rockefeller and continued to serve as allowed by law past the retirement age, appointed successively by Governor Malcolm Wilson and Hugh L. Carey.

Christ to Get Bar Group's Annual Medal

Garden City — State Supreme Court Justice Marcus G. Christ will receive the Nassau County Bar Association's Distinguished Service Medallion for 1962 at the association's annual dinner on May 24.

Christ, who started his judicial career when he became police justice in New Hyde Park 34 years ago, has been assigned to the Appellate Division of Supreme Court for several years. He is a past president and director of the bar association, a former president of the New York State County Officers Association and a former chairman of the Nassau County Chapter of the American Red Cross. The bar association named Christ for the annual award in "recognition of more than 30 years of distinguished service on the bench and in other public offices."

The bar association president, Charles P. Buckley Jr. of Freeport, said he expected more than 1,000 members and guests to attend the dinner to be held in the Garden City Hotel. The association's Distinguished Service Medallion was first awarded in 1940 to former President Hoover.

Justice Christ is a graduate of New Hyde Park public schools and Hempstead High School. He holds a bachelor of arts degree from the University of Pennsylvania and a Juris Doctor degree from Harvard Law School, as well as a honorary degree of Doctor of Laws from St. John's University and Adelphi University.

Charlotte Christ Bernard (daughter of Marcus Christ)

In 1928, Justice Christ married Marion C. Hallsted of Athens, N.Y. Justice and Mrs. Christ have four children–Philip J., Marcus Hallsted, Mrs. Charlotte E. Bernard and Donald C.– and twelve grandchildren.

Along with his many years in the legal profession and in the Judiciary, Justice Christ has long been active in community affairs. He was instrumental in the incorporation of New Hyde Park, serving as a member of the incorporation committee and as its counsel. He is also a past president of the Bank of New Hyde Park. He was a founder of the New Hyde Park Village Library and of the Sewanhaka High School District. He is a past chairman of the Nassau County Chapter of the American Red Cross, a past president of the New York State County officers Association and, long and avid boat enthusiast, past Commodore of the Manhasset Bay Yacht Club.

A past president of the Bar Association of Nassau County, Justice Christ has been a recipient of the Association's Distinguished Service Award. He was also a recipient of the Long Island Daily Press Distinguished Service Award for outstanding service to Nassau County.

He is a member of the Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity of the University of Pennsylvania, the Langdell Law Club of Harvard law School, the Manhasset Bay and Shelter Island Yacht Clubs, the New Hyde Park Fire Department, the Elks Lodge and the New Hyde Park American Legion Post.

Gottsch Family: Max and Charlotte Gottsch were the parents of Philip Christ's wife, Anna Gottsch. The Gottschs were Marcus G. Christ's maternal grandparents.

PHILIP MILLER, NEW HYDE PARK PIONEER, DEAD

97-Year-Old Man Passes On as Friends Gather to Give Him Party

NEW HYDE PARK—This village today mourned the death of its oldest and most beloved citizen, Philip J. Miller, 97. He died Christmas Eve as friends and relatives were gathering to be with him for the holiday.

Although he had been critically ill for several weeks, the last words he uttered were a prayer for peace and a hope that Europe would end its war.

Mr. Miller's death was attributed to old age. He died at 6:45 P. M., Sunday, at the home of his step daughter-in-law, Mrs. Philip Christ, with whom he had lived for the past 38 years.

Despite partial blindness and the infirmities of his age, Mr. Miller insisted on keeping abreast of life about him, particularly of the happenings in this village which he helped develope from a crossroads.

Organized Firemen

He organized the volunteer fire department in 1890, led the fight for establishment of the postoffice in 1871 and contributed half of the cost for building the Long Island Railroad station.

When a group decided to build a Catholic church, it was Mr. Miller who was the organizer. From this beginning grew the present parish of the Church of the Holy Ghost, and Mr. Miller was the first president of the Holy Name Society of the church.

The village saw its first school constructed in 1883. That structure still stands on New Hyde Park road, surrounded by 18 trees planted as saplings and presented to the school board by Mr. Miller.

Mr. Miller came to this community as a young man of 24 in 1867 from Veilsheim, Germany, his birthplace. He opened a general store on Jericho turnpike, which, at that time, was only a plank road from Jamaica. Many years afterward, he built the Colonial Hotel, which still stands on Miller's lane and Jericho turnpike.

Not until he was 88, did he give up his place in the choir of the Holy Ghost Church, and he was over 90 when ill health forced him to give up working his one-acre garden.

Mr. Miller was a lifelong Republican. He voted for the last time in 1938 for District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey, Republican gubernatorial candidate.

Mr. Miller always attributed "regular living habits" as the secret of his old age. He said he never smoked and indulged in alcoholic drinks only moderately.

Couldn't Go to Fair

When the village was aroused over a municipal-lighting controversy a few years ago, Mr. Miller issued a statement supporting municipal ownership. He never grew too old to take an active interest in his community. He had looked forward to visiting the World Fair, but his failing eyesight and ill health kept him away.

On the death of his personal friend, John C. Christ, many years ago, Mr. Miller married Christ's widow. She died 33 years ago, and Mr. Miller went to live with his step-son, Philip Christ. He died seven years ago, and since then Mr. Miller has lived with his step daughter-in-law, Mrs. Christ.

Although Mr. Miller never had any children of his own, he leaves a step-daughter, Mrs. G. A. Fensterer of Garden City, a step-brother, Frank Miller of this village; seven grandchildren, 16 greatgrandchildren and one great-greatgrandchild.

A high requiem mass will be offered at Holy Ghost Church at 10 A. M., Thursday, and burial will be in St. Boniface Cemetery.

6 - Philip J. Miller

Philip Miller married John Christ's widow Rosina, became Postmaster and expanded the Inn John Christ built renaming it the "Colonial Hotel." Philip also built a store on the opposite corner for the grocery business and a second floor above which was called Millers Hall. In 1920 he sold the inn to Frank Garvey, and, with the new owner it became the "Long Island Seed Company".

New Hyde Park's Grand Old Man

One cannot very well think of New Hyde Park without associating with it the name of Phil J. Miller. Mr. Miller is the oldest resident of this Village and has always taken an active interest in its affairs.

He is one of its pioneers, having moved here in 1867. At that time there were only a few dwellings in what is now the Incorporated Village of New Hyde Park, including a silk weaving establishment which was conducted by Anton Herkomer, on Millers Lane, whose residence is still occupied by his daughter, Mrs. Jacob Simon. Mr. Miller together with John C. Christ, father of Philip J. Christ, was instrumental in establishing the first Post Office.

In 1870 he planted the beautiful maple trees on Millers Lane, which are an ornament to the street and Village. Later he planted the trees on Ingraham Lane and New Hyde Park Road, also the trees on the Jericho Turnpike. It was largely due to his efforts that many of our streets were opened and improved.

Mr. Miller served many years as Postmaster of New Hyde Park, and held various public positions in the Town and School District.

As a Real Booster, the Grand Old Man is, and always has been a 100% booster and is still going strong.

Our hats are off to him and we extend to him our congratulations and wish him a continuance of good health to enjoy the fruits of his many years of unselfish contribution to the success of New Hyde Park.

failed to participate in church and community affairs. Catholics were holding their masses upstairs at Millers Hall and, as there were quite a number of families, they organized a drive to build a church. Ben was one of the original supporters of the Holy Spirit Roman Catholic Church. He also was a member of the Board of Trade.

The Village incorporated in 1927 and both competing parties nominated him as a candidate to the Office of Trustee. He served in that capacity for three terms. Later he accepted the job as Superintendent of Highways and retired in the late 50's. Ben died in New Hyde Park, July 1967.

Ben and Elizabeth had eight children.

Henry (1897-1960) served in WWI. He worked for the post office and as a custodian at Sewanhaka High School.

Julia (1899) married Zeblinski.

Rudolph (1901-1978) was a driver for a milk company.

Elizabeth (1905-1957) married Rottkamp Farmer.

Benedick, Jr. (1908-1984) worked as a painter for Levit.

Clement (1910-1989) worked for Gartrell Motors.

Joseph (1912-1987) married Theresa Farina and worked for Mack Truck Co., was a painter and involved in the New Hyde Park Fire Dept.

Theresa Hauck (1920) lives in New Hyde Park.

Benedick Hauck's children were also active, mostly in the Fire Dept. However, they can't match the involvement and enthusiasm of their father.

Residence and dry goods store of Aaron Holman.
300 Jericho Turnpike

Aaron Holman would travel from farm to farm, sleeping in the hay lofts of the barns, eating with families and developing a following. People would give him orders for his next trip out, and in this way he eventually built a business. He was a very likable, trustworthy and exceedingly kind person; so people took to him very easily.

8 - Aaron Holman

Contributed by Evelyn Holman (daughter of Aaron) and Gary Holman (grandson of Aaron)

Aaron Holman was born in Vitesbek, Russia, in 1874. At 15 he was drafted into The Russian Army, obtaining an honorable discharge at the age of 17. He arrived in the U.S. before the turn of the century and settled on the east side of NYC. He became a peddler, selling whatever he could carry (yard goods, notions, etc.), and selected the country (New Hyde Park and Garden City Park) for his territory - all farmers.

Most Jewish foreigners settled on the east side of New York City when they arrived in the U.S. There were many meeting places where they could gather, communicate and make friends. My father went to the one that represented his homeland. He met Chaim Fahrman who had known my father's family in Russia. They became friends, and my father was invited to Chaim's home for dinner. He met his family and was attracted to Liba (my mother) who was only 14 years old at the time. After a time, he asked to marry her. My grandparents consulted her and she consented. But my grandmother made conditions, Liba could not marry until she was 16 years old, and she couldn't have children until she was 18 years old. My father consented to these terms, and so they married when Liba became 16 years old.

After the wedding, the couple went to Garden City Park to live. They rented a house there and, as my mother sewed very well, she made dresses, aprons, etc. which my father sold to his customers. They accumulated enough cash to buy a horse and wagon - no more pack on the back for my father. Not long afterwards, they rented (from Mr. Wiggins who lived on Lakeville Road) a house in New Hyde Park on the corner of 9th Street and Jericho Turnpike. This house had a store in the front, with living quarters in the back and upstairs. They did very well with this store. The farmers and their families now came to the store to buy their supplies. The town had a population of Germans and many Polish people who were construction workers, shop keepers, etc. They all shopped at my parent's store. My parents learned to speak Polish. Eventually the Polish people began to trust and love my father implicitly. In essence, he became their "Godfather."

My parent's next move was to a much larger house and store on the corner of 10th Street and Jericho Turnpike. I was born in that house. The farmers and their families would come to shop. They would hitch their horses to the posts in front of the store. Business was good. My parents purchased this house and several other properties in the town.

My father was a member of the firefighters of the New Hyde Park Fire Department (there were only six or seven members). My brother David was the mascot. He was five or six years old at the time. Later on, my father helped organize the Bank of New Hyde Park and he was the Vice President of this bank. Eventually, he gave up the store and went into land development. We still maintained our living quarters in the house. After my brother was admitted to the bar, he opened a law office where the store had been.

In 1926, we moved to Mineola. David married, and not long after, moved into his own newly built home on 12th Street in New Hyde Park. In 1929, the great depression began. My parent's encountered adversity like many others. They tried to survive as best they could. My father opened a small beer parlor. Conditions were exceedingly bad. My father's health was failing. In 1936 they gave up all their remaining, dwindling assets and moved to California. My father died on March 4, 1941, at 66 years of age.

9 - David Holman

I am about to write the biography of David Holman and, as I sit here, I reminisce about his life and times. One event in particular enters my mind: a speech he gave against the proposal to have an incinerator built in New Hyde Park on the site where we now have the pool and fitness center. His speech was so eloquent and convincing, that we in the audience thought we could smell the odor and see the flyash. Needless to say, the proposal was defeated.

Dave Holman spent all his life in public service. He was born July 20, 1904 in New Hyde Park in a house at 300 Jericho Turnpike and the corner of South 3rd Street where his dad had a dry goods store. The neighborhood children were his playmates, one of whom: Florence Strauss later became the Village Clerk. He had a sister Evelyn. His primary education was at the New Hyde Park public schools. He graduated from Hempstead High School and though his father was established by then, money still was scarce. So Dave went from High School right to Law School. He received his law degree from New York University but was too young to take the bar examination; therefore, he clerked for a year at a law firm. By the time he was 21, he not only was admitted to the bar, but even had a year of practical law experience behind him.

David Holman

After passing the Bar Examination, he started practicing law–first at his father's place of business at 300 Jericho Turnpike, and later he opened an office above the Altman Store in the 800 block on Jericho Turnpike.

Dave spoke Polish, so it was only natural for the Polish farmers to select him for their lawyer. But he was more than that. He was like a big brother to them, father-confessor, and advisor and ready to help. There was one young man, actually just a teenager, who was playing with a rifle and got into trouble with the police. The frantic parents called on Dave and he got the boy released into his custody. There was no record and the family remained grateful and loyal to Dave.

Another time, a group of young men congregated on Jericho Turnpike and Lakeville Road in front of the Diner. It was night, and their discussions became animated and heated. When the policeman asked them to break it up, they just continued. So they were arrested and landed in jail. A telephone call to Dave brought him to their rescue. Again, he had them released into his custody, and they all became respectable citizens.

As a lawyer, Dave handled everything. He had to make a living, so of course there was a fee for his services, but many times, when people were hard up, he just forgot about charging them. And when his clients, friends or party members were troubled about something, they just came to his house to discuss their problems.

He built his home on North 12th Street in New Hyde Park where he lived with his wife Ethel Katz Holman and his children: Gary born Feb. 23, 1931 and Sandra born July 14, 1929, to the end of his life.

Dave Holman organized and founded the New Hyde Park Republican Club, whose first president was William A. Hausch and due to Dave's ceaseless activities on behalf of the club, the membership grew and New Hyde Park became the most important organization in North Hempstead. All republican candidates, from President Nixon and Governor Rockefeller to the local officials, made it their duty to stop at New Hyde Park. The second organization Dave founded in New Hyde Park was the Non-Partisan League, which was a Village Political Party.

In 1931 two new Trustees were elected to the Village Board: Cyril Cox and my father George Christ. They proposed Dave Holman to be the Counsel, while Marcus Christ took the job of Police Justice. With Dave a new era started in New Hyde Park. Dave was not on the sidelines, waiting to be asked about a legality of an ordinance or proposal. He took a very active part in guiding the Board. He was not only their village Attorney, he was also their protector. If an irate citizen came with a complaint, it was Dave who straightened him out and explained the law to him. He remained Village Attorney for the next 25 years. The thirties were the years of the great depression. Many people could not pay their property taxes and just abandoned their parcels. In this way Dave first acquired land where now the Village Garage is located. His next venture was to buy the school building on Jericho Turnpike and New Hyde Park Road for $25,000.00 to house the Village offices. The monies were raised through a bond issue. Dave Holman proposed a zoning plan: along Jericho Turnpike and Lakeville Road, 100 feet deep was zoned for business and along the railroad, 100 feet deep for industrial. The rest was zoned residential except for businesses that were already established.

Dave Holman was the driving force in the following zoning and acquisition projects:

Memorial Field: The land for our beautiful park was acquired through a tax sale. Edwin Russel donated 4 lots to the village, which became part of Memorial Field.

Parking Field on Lakeville Road.

Parking Field along the railroad on 3rd Avenue.

Brooklyn Avenue property for another parking field. Mayor Messina later changed it to a playground.

Rezoning of the Osipinski property, now New Hyde Park Funeral Home.

Rezoning of the Baer property for industrial use along 3rd Ave.

Rezoning of Triangle Sheet Metal property.

All those acquisitions and rezonings were done by Dave Holman with taxpayers in mind. We were in the depression and industry could easier afford paying taxes. Besides, there were no children from the factories to be educated in our schools. Dave Holman was a very conservative man. Through all those years while he was not only the attorney, but the architect of the future for the village, the tax rate remained at 99 cents per hundred. Of course, all those acquisitions and zonings required a lot of legal work, which Dave did at little cost.

There was one unsuccessful project. Dave thought of having our own electric power plant. The proposition was put on the ballot and the villagers voted for it. But the project was abandoned as being too costly.

Dave knew his clients and he knew the villagers. They were honest, hard working people, having a difficult time during the depression. To make it easier for them to borrow money he founded the Fidelity Credit Union. Later, much later, in the sixties he was one of the four original founders of the State Bank of Long Island.

Amongst Dave Holman's other activities in the Village of New Hyde Park was Attorney for the Union Free School District No. 5. That greatly facilitated the acquisition of the building on Jericho Turnpike. He was a fireman and the Attorney for the Fire District. When President Roosevelt was elected and the WPA established, Dave petitioned the government and it was then, that many of our residential streets received sidewalks.

He must have enjoyed working. As I said before, he was right in the midst of everything. He familiarized himself with everything, never missed a meeting and was always planning for the future. As I am writing all this, which I all know from personal experience, I am impressed anew with the man who was Dave Holman. You might think that what I have conveyed so far is more than one man can handle, but that is not all. These are only his activities in New Hyde Park. In addition, he was Chief Prosecuting Attorney in the Nassau County District Attorney's Office from the 1930's until his retirement in 1952.

He was always planning. He was always striving and, even in the face of adversity, he never gave up. Yet through all the years, the nomination to the Supreme Court eluded him. It was only after many, many years of public service that he received the nomination and in 1968 was elected to the bench of the New York State Supreme Court, where he served until his death in December 1969.

Epilogue - There is a Marcus Avenue to honor Judge Marcus Christ. We have an Ingraham Lane and a Herkomer Street. A Baer Place, a Millers Lane, a Hoffmann Road and a Denton Avenue. There is no street sign for David Holman. With this biography, I want to pay tribute to a remarkable man who, more than anyone else, shaped the Village of New Hyde Park.

Hon. J. Nicholas Krug.

Mayor 1927-1931

New Hyde Park—Services will be held today for J. Nicholas Krug, 88, a retired insurance agent and the first mayor of the Village of New Hyde Park, who died Saturday in Syosset General Hospital, after a short illness.

Krug, who until three years ago lived at 635 Jericho Tpke., served two terms as mayor between 1927 and 1931. In successive years he served as a member and later president of the New Hyde Park School Board. At one time he operated a hotel adjacent to the Long Island Rail Road station and prior to the depression he built several housing developments in the area.

In 1930, he and his son, now deceased, established the J. Nicholas Krug Insurance Agency which is still in operation on Jericho Turnpike. At the time of his death he was a member of the New Hyde Park Fire Department, the Holy Name Society of the Holy Spirit Church, the Knights of Columbus and a retired member of the Lions Club. Krug was also trustee of the New Hyde Park Bank.

Since his retirement three years ago he resided at 10 Ships Lane, Bayville, with his daughter and only survivor, Miss Justine A. Krug.

Solemn Requiem Mass will be held at Holy Spirit Church, Wednesday at 9:30 AM. Burial will follow in Holy Rood Cemetery, Westbury.

10 - The Krug Family

Contributor Lucille Krug Buce

Like so many others in New Hyde Park, the Krug family came from Germany. John Krug was born in Alsace Lorraine and was a carpenter by trade. When he emigrated to the U.S. in 1862, he was already married and had a seven-year-old son by the name of Nicholas. This Nicholas was the father of our first Mayor.

John, his wife and son, Nicholas, settled in Fosters Meadow, which is now Elmont and taught his son the carpenter trade. Nicholas, as was custom at the time, was working alongside his father and they prospered. Eventually, Nicholas struck out on his own. He had met Justina Reuter, who was from New Hyde Park and, after marrying her in 1880, he moved to her hometown. They lived in the farm house, corner of 3rd Ave. and South 12th Street. Their first son, J. Nicholas, was born in 1881, and five more children were to follow: Elizabeth 1883, Margaret 1886, Justine 1889, and two more sons, August 1891 and Joseph 1893.

Hon. J. Nicholas Krug,
First Mayor of New Hyde Park.

J. Nicholas Krug
First Mayor of New Hyde Park

Nicholas and his wife Justina wanted their children brought up as Catholics, so when young J. Nicholas was of school age he attended St. Boniface School. The school was in Fosters Meadow, and because of the distance, he had to be brought there by horse and buggy. And, because that was a time consuming trip and the elders had to attend to their work, J. Nicholas was left at the convent. As the other children became of age, they too were enrolled at the same school and lived at the same convent. Of course, the children were there only during the week. Sunday afternoons they took the buggy ride and were picked up on Friday to come home for the weekend.

Young J. Nicholas didn't do just school work but, along with his brothers, was taught carpentry and the building trade. All the fathers at that time had their children helping them to become skillful at some handy work.

When J. Nicholas was 23, he was well prepared to make a living for himself and start a family. He married Louise Graff in 1904, and the following year a son Carl was born. The year 1907 brought another economic downturn, and there was not much demand for builders or carpenters. J. Nicholas was forced to look for other employment and found it as a driver for the Adolph Hausch Bakery. When the situation started to improve in 1910, he acquired from Nicholas Reuter the Inn and Dance Hall on the corner of Millers Lane and 2nd Avenue and renamed it the "J. Nicholas Krug's Inn and Dance Hall." The locals just called it "Krug's Hall." It was a very popular place with young people, and many of them met their future spouses there.

Once again there was a reversal in J. Nicholas Krug's fortune. Congress passed the Volstead Act (18th Amendment). Mothers, wives and women in general were fighting very hard for it and were jubilant to have succeeded. Their victory was the defeat of all saloons, inns and all the watering places. Krug Hall was closed, and J. Nicholas went back to his old trade of building houses. In New Hyde Park, he built on South 12th Street, Millers Lane, Ingraham Lane and Herkomer Street. By now his son Carl was 15 years old and became his father's helper.

During all those years, J. Nicholas was involved in community affairs. In 1925 he started a new venture. He was a builder, so it was natural to go into the real estate business and, as insurance is tied to it, he also became an insurance man. He opened an office at 1115 Jericho Turnpike, and his son became his associate.

The Village of New Hyde Park has grown. It consisted of many more families than the original ten. Up until now, people discussed community affairs among themselves and came to a collective decision. It was a way that wasn't practical anymore and various organizations felt the need for a local government. The Village was to be incorporated and candidates for Mayor and Trustees selected.

There were two parties: The Citizen Party and The Public Affairs Part. J. Nicholas Krug ran for Mayor. He was known and greatly respected by the whole village and was endorsed by both parties. The other candidate who received cross endorsement was Ben Hauck who was running for Trustee. So, 1927 saw the birth of the Incorporation of the Village of New Hyde Park with J. Nicholas Krug as its first Mayor. The first village taxes were collected in 1928.

One of the first undertakings of the administration was the improvement and paving of the sidewalks on both sides of Jericho Turnpike. And that's when the administration had its first scandal. No, the village fathers didn't do anything wrong; it was the contractor who mixed too much sand into the concrete and delivered an inferior product.

J. Nicholas Krug took his job very seriously, but after four years he wanted to devote more time to his business and did not seek re-election. The village community appreciated a job well done.

His insurance business was growing and he moved in 1930 to a new locale at 635 Jericho Turnpike. The J. Nicholas Krug Insurance Agency is still at the same address, but completely modernized.

It was a bleak and sad time for J. Nicholas Krug in 1953, when his only son Carl died. He himself was already an old man and a widower. He lived through good and hard times, achieved success and standing in the community, and now his dream of passing on his business to the next generation was shattered. It was the "Krug" agency, and he wanted to see a "Krug" in it. Luckily his brother August had a son Clifford who, along with Lucille's husband Charles Buce, was willing to join the agency. They became associate partners.

J. Nicholas Krug had a long and fruitful life. He died in 1969. His last 3 years he lived with his granddaughter Justine in Bayville, Long Island.

Members of the Krug Family

Our first Mayor's brother Joseph left New Hyde Park and moved to Rockville Centre where he opened an ice cream parlor. His other brother August (1891-1946) stayed in New Hyde Park and married Anna Buck. All of his four children were born here. When World War I broke out, he was called to serve his country. Like his father and grandfather, August was a skilled builder and carpenter and taught his sons. Therefore, when preparation for the World's Fair in Flushing Meadow got underway, both Krugs–August Sr. and August Jr.–received jobs as carpenters (1938-1939). All three sons of August and Anna–Clifford, Vincent and August Jr.–served oversees in World War II. August Jr. was wounded and lost an eye in the Black Forest in Germany. After returning home, all three of them had jobs in the New Hyde Park Post Office. Clifford left in order to run the insurance business with his uncle, J. Nicholas Krug. The only daughter Lucille, together with her husband Charles Buce, joined them and worked there until their retirement. There is no Krug working in the office, but the insurance company still exists.

11 - The Baer Family

Contributed by Carol Dressel Baer

Henry Baer was born in Darmstadt, Germany on April 9, 1843, and like so many other Germans in the second half of the last century, he left his native country and came to the USA in 1878. He was married to Maria Henrich (November 10, 1844- July 20, 1920) and already the father of 6 children. Three more were born in America.

One has to wonder about the courage of all those immigrants to leave relatives and friends and all familiar places where they spent their childhood and just move to a foreign land. Maybe the regime was too oppressive, or maybe there were just too many stories about the golden land where one can make a fortune. Whatever the reason, Henry came to New Hyde Park and found shelter with the Reuters at their Inn. Like all immigrants they worked hard and eventually bought land, built a house and took part in community affairs. They eventually built a home on South 12th Street.

Henry and Maria's nine children included:

William married Louise Reuter, and they had five daughters: Anne, Lillian, Charlotte, Bertha and Madeline. William was a carpenter.

Charles was born in Frankfurt on the Rhine, Germany, April 1, 1859, and died in New Hyde Park, NY on May 2, 1947, at the age of 78. He married Margaret Reuter on December 28, 1893, in New Hyde Park, NY. They had five children: Catherine, Helen, William, Arthur and Carlton. Charles worked for the John Lewis Childs Company in Floral Park until they went out of business in 1929 when the depression hit the country.

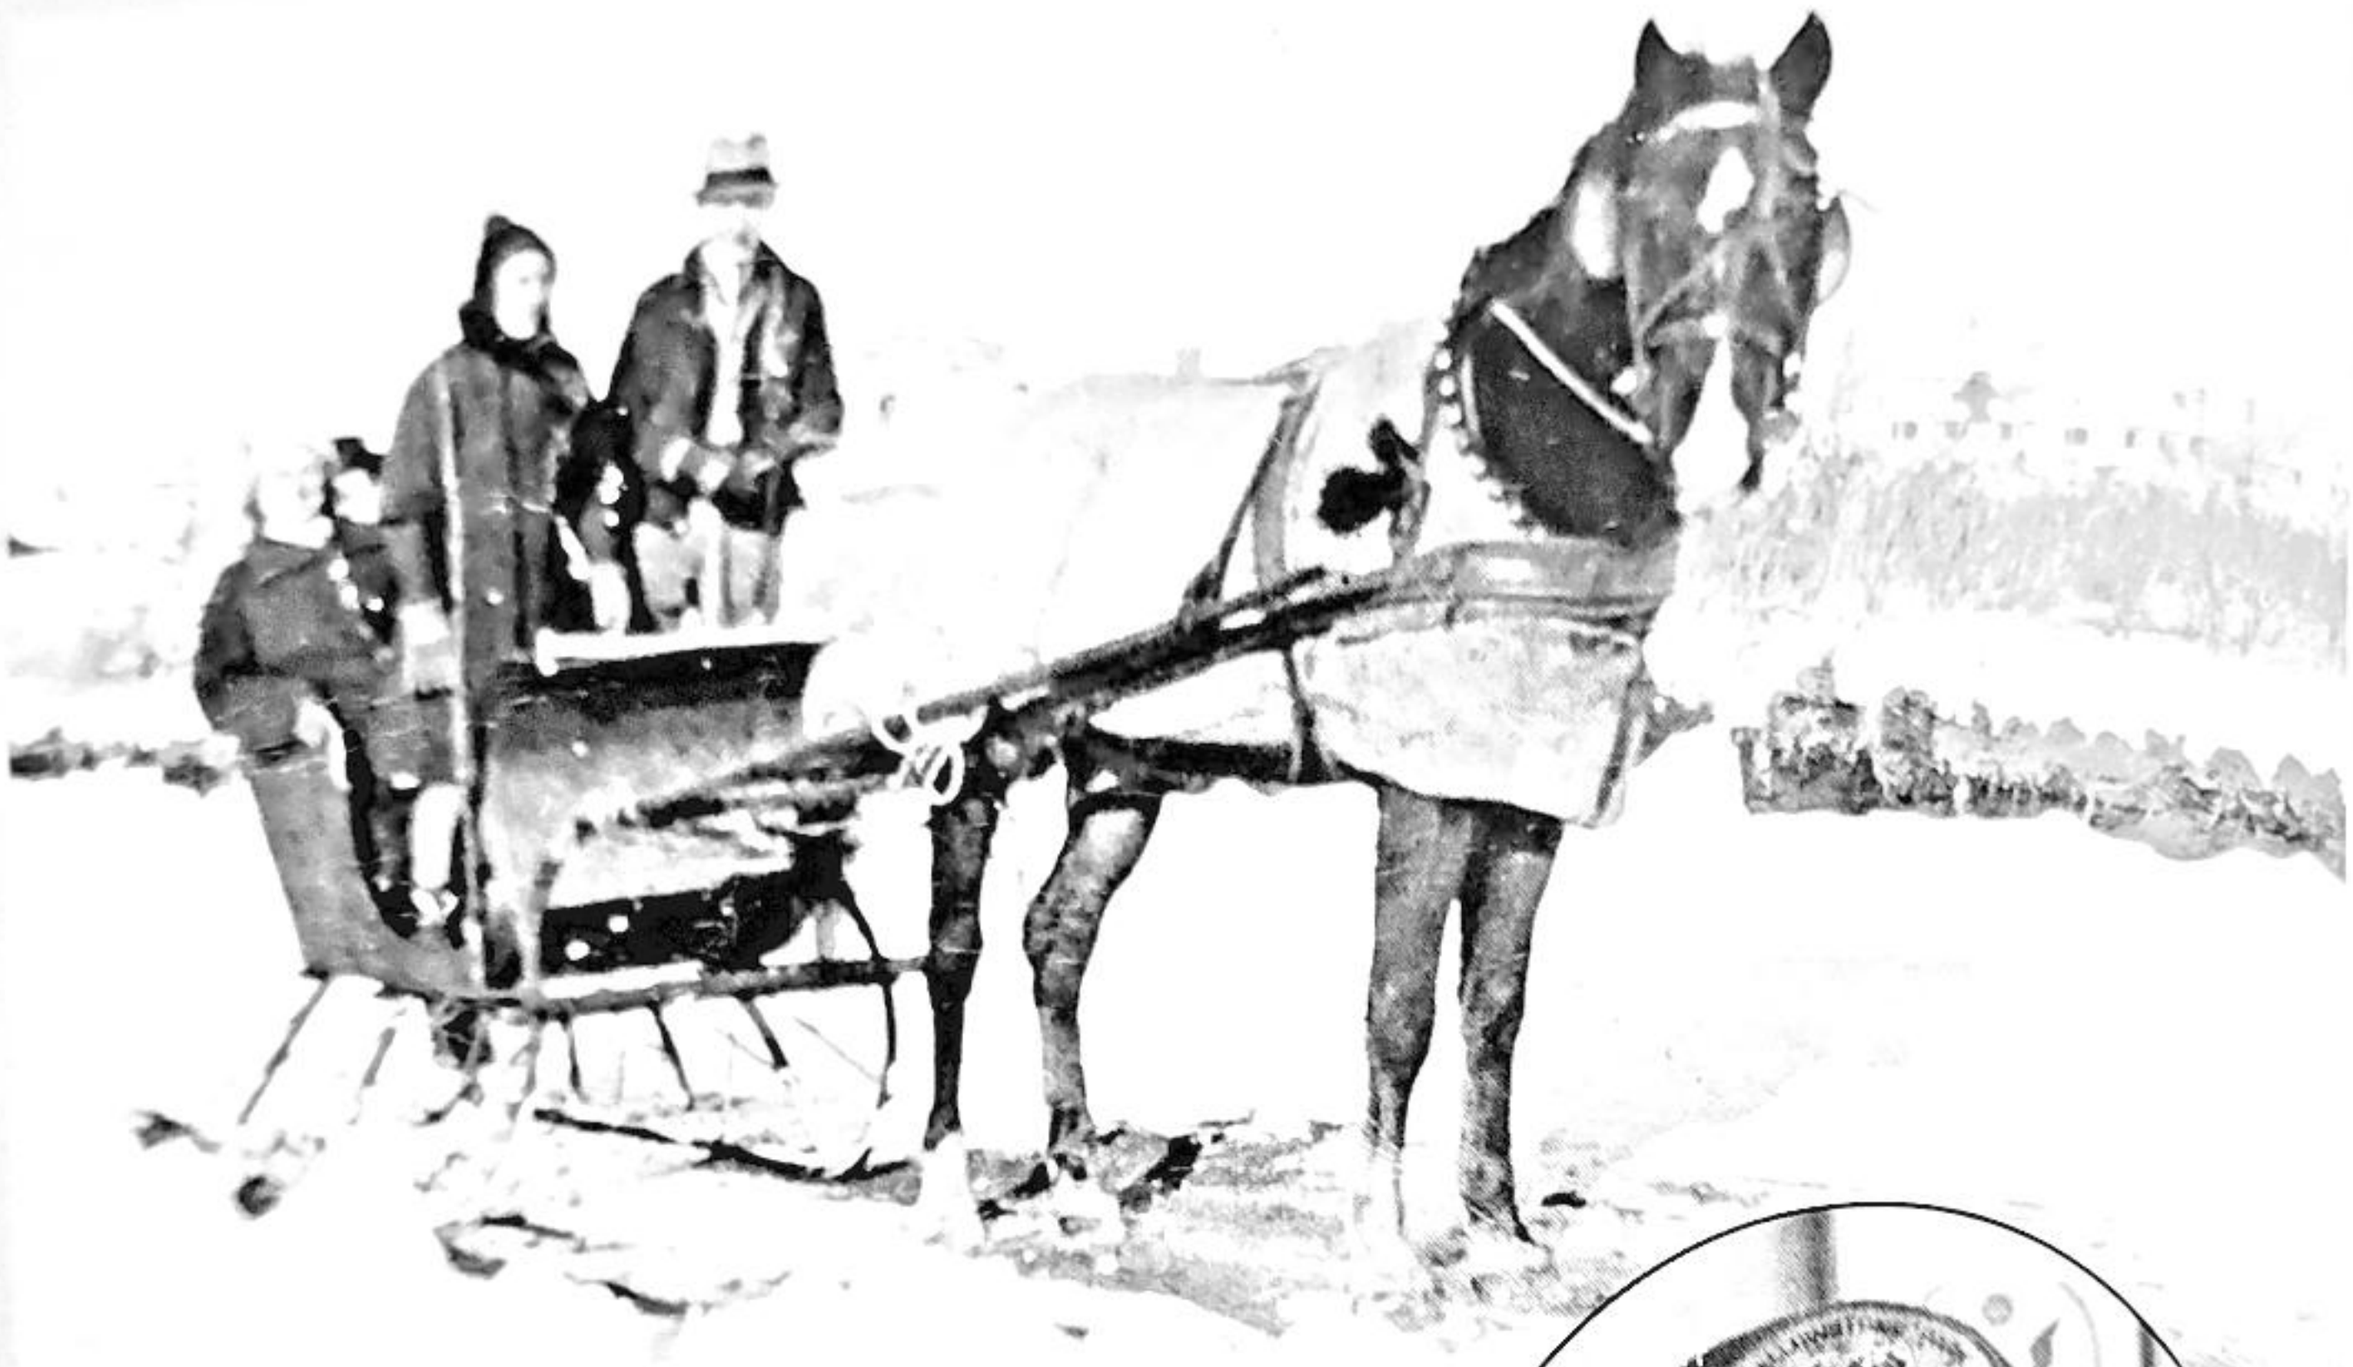
Lena married a man named Bieg, and they had one son, Clinton.

Herman married Wilhemina Epping, and they had three children: Harold, Milton and Evelyn.

Catherine was three years old when they arrived from Germany in 1878. She married Herman Wachter, and they had four children.

The three youngest were born in New Hyde Park, NY: Emma married J. Earle Berkey; George married Aunt Belle late in life; and Wilhemina never married.

Uncle Nick always told me of the Baer's arrival in New Hyde Park. It seems they intended to stay with a friend, but found he tended horses for rich people on the north side of town and had no home. As they had no place to go, the Reuters, who owned the hotel at the Station, took them in. The Reuters would be Uncle Nick and Bill Baer's grandparents. The Baer's must have brought the two girls and maybe William with them and left Herman and Charles in Germany to come over alone later. Charles (Grandpa) always said he came here when he was 16 which would have been in 1885. Herman told his family that he came over alone at eight years of age.



Emma Christ, George E. Christ, Milton Baer and Carol Christ.

Helen Kettner

Mrs. Helen Kettner, a bookkeeper for the John Lewis Child Company, Floral Park, when her father, Charles Baer, was general manager, died Monday in Nassau Hospital, Mineola, after a brief illness.

Mrs. Kittner, whose home was at 533 North Second street, New Hyde Park, was born there 42 years ago. She was active in the Dutch Reformed Church.

Besides her father, she leaves her husband, Herbert; her mother, Mrs. Marget Baer; a sister, Mrs. Katherine Shannon, and three brothers, Carlton, William and Arthur Baer.

Services will be held at 8 o'clock tonight in the funeral home of Thomas F. Dalton, 29 Atlantic avenue, Floral Park. The Rev. David Weidner will officiate.

Burial will be in Greenfields Cemetery, Hempstead.

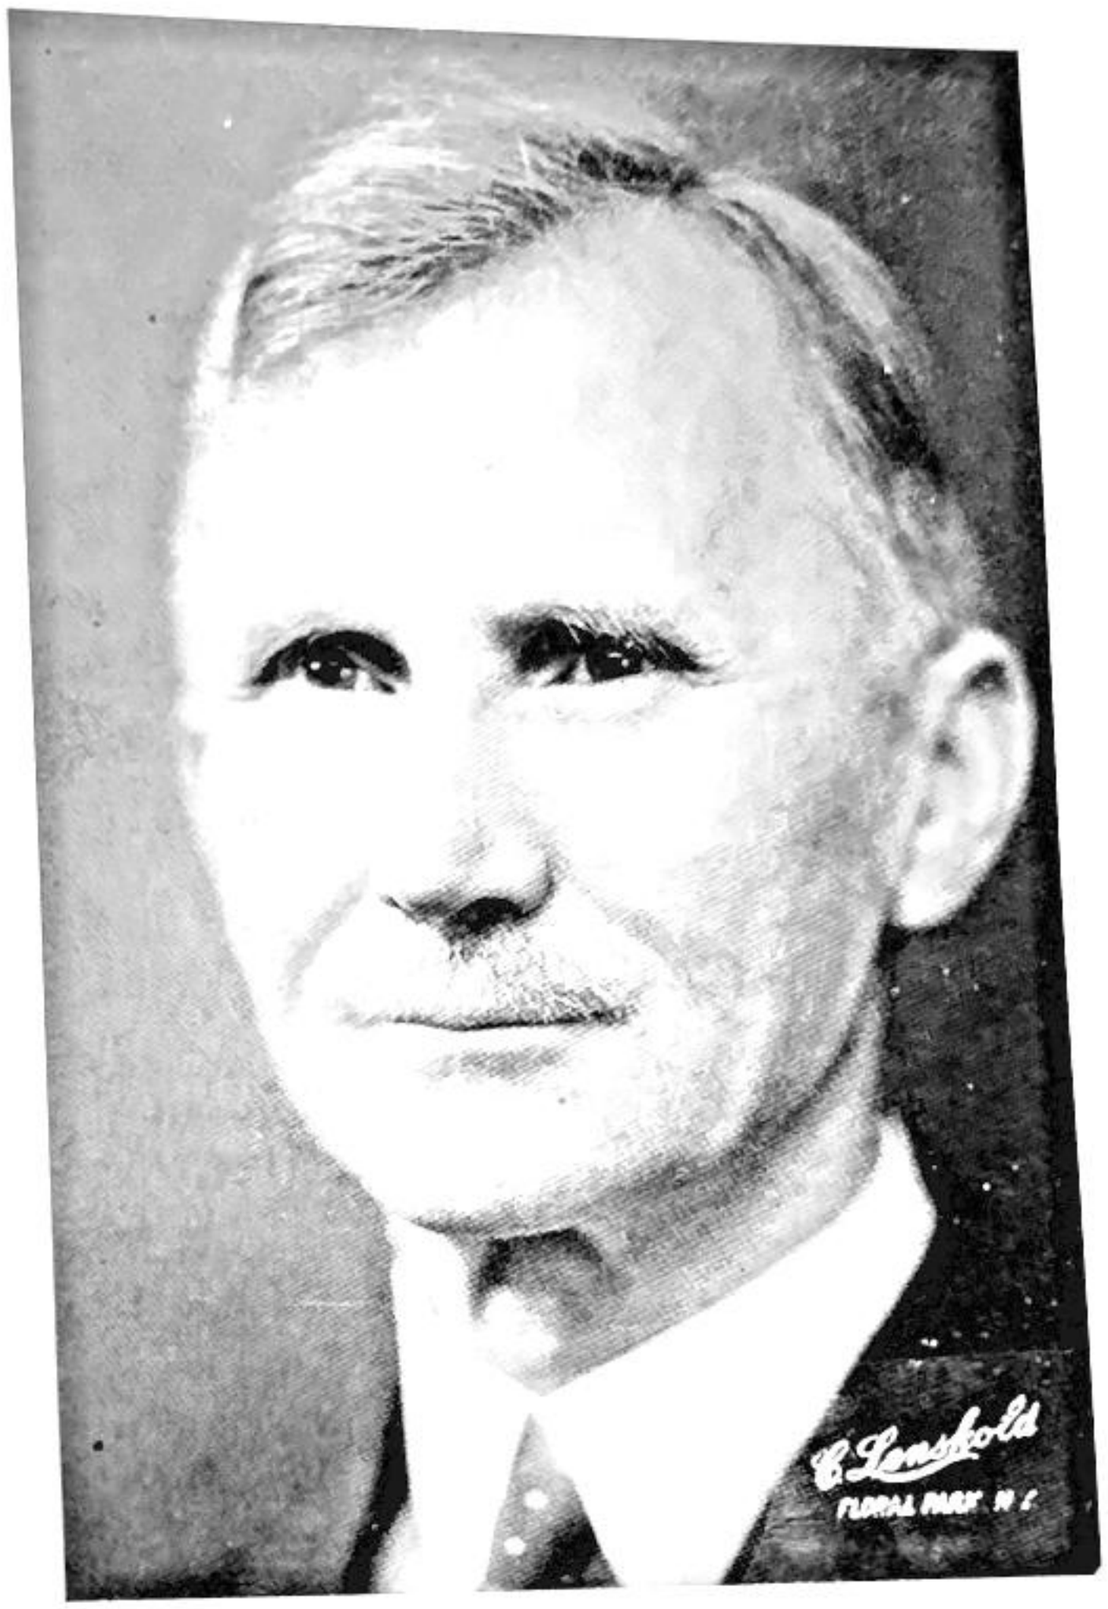
Helen Baer Kettner, granddaughter of Henry and Maria.

Milton Baer, grandson of Henry and Maria.

Herman Baer

Herman (1871-1951) and George became florists. They first worked in Floral Park for Allen Florist and later they had their own business and raised gladiolus and chrysanthemums. They sold their blooms in New York City and Herman went by train at five in the morning and returned by eight. Although he didn't have much free time, he nevertheless became very active in the community. When the village was incorporated in 1927, Herman was elected Trustee. Four years later, when then Mayor Nicholas Krug choose not to seek re-election, Herman Baer was nominated, elected, and became our second Mayor.

He was affiliated with the following organizations: The Shield of Honor, U.S. Flag Association, The Board of Trade, New Hyde Park Fire Department, New Hyde Park School Board and The First Reformed Church. His son Milton still lives in the village in a charming cottage, which is the oldest house in New Hyde Park. Up to his retirement at the age of 80, he was active in the New Hyde Park administration.



Hon. Herman H. Baer, 2nd Mayor of New Hyde Park.

CAME WITH BROTHER CHARLES FROM GERMANY

12 - The Hoffmann Family

Most of the immigrants who came from Germany and eventually landed in the hamlet of Hyde Park had some kind of mechanical skill. Charles Hoffmann was a farmer and after arriving in the USA along with his brother William, he sought work on a farm. We don't know why he came to this particular place. Maybe because there already were several Germans living in this area, and rich farm land was available. He rented a farm from Augustus Denton and grew potatoes, beans, carrots, peas, beets and corn. The farm boundaries were from the Village of New Hyde Park border east to Denton Ave. and from Jericho Turnpike north to Evergreen Ave.

Augustus Denton knew he had good land, but he never realized how good it really was. He was sitting on a goldmine. No, not the shining metal, but sand. Beautiful, clean sand, which was eventually mined. Thousands upon thousands of yards of sand were removed from an area north of the railroad tracks to almost Hillside Ave. The sand was shipped to New York City and used in the building trade. So we can say New Hyde Park helped in the development of the "Big Apple."

Charles remained at the farm and was later helped by his growing sons. He and his wife, Catherine, had five children.

John William Hoffmann

One of Charles Hoffmann's sons, J. William, who was born in 1886, is of interest to us. As a boy, he started to work on the farm, and little did he think that one day he would aspire to elective office. He was a good farmer and, when he came of age, he went into business for himself. From Mr. Taft, he leased a farm on the NE corner of Jericho Turnpike and New Hyde Park Road and became a potato farmer. About the same time he married a young lady by the name of Clara. Farming is hard work, and it takes a long time for the produce to grow. Many times after the harvest there is only a limited market for it. J. William was not only a good farmer, but also a successful salesman and was always able to find buyers. He and his wife Clara had two daughters: Mae born 1908 and Mildred born 1910. Clara died in 1911. J. William remarried in 1913 to Elizabeth, and another daughter, Amelia, was born in 1915.

J. William was content to be a farmer. He had a nice family, the ground was fertile and he was able to sell his produce. Then in the 1920's, much to his surprise, the farm was sold to a developer. He had to leave. At 1529 Jericho Turnpike, the foundation of that old farmhouse is still there, but the house itself is completely changed and modernized. Philip J. Christ offered him a job as a seed salesman for his company and, when Frank Garvey bought the Christ Store, he continued in his job with the new owner. Frank Garvey renamed the business the "Long Island Seed Co." J. William also worked for George Stattel. Now that he was no longer isolated on a farm, he started to be active in the community. He was a faithful member of his church on South 9th Street and built his house on the same street.

Village Pays Last Respects to Hoffman

New Hyde Park—Last respects were paid to Mayor J. William Hoffman, when his body was borne through here on the way to Greenfield Cemetery, Hempstead, yesterday followed by a cortege a mile long.

All schools were closed at 10 o'clock to allow the children to see the procession, which wound through the village to pass fire headquarters on Milliers La., and the village hall on Jericho Tpke. All flags in the village were at half-mast.

The cortege left Dalton's Funeral Parlor, Floral Park, headed by a Nassau County Police escort of two cars, two Fire Dept. trucks and a car filled with flowers.

In the procession were Acting Mayor William S. Dillon and Trustees Arthur Elbert, John L. Durson and Wilfred Bowe, Florence A. Strauss, village clerk and David Holman, village attorney.

As the cortege neared fire headquarters, the firemen on the two trucks formed a company and marched in the procession.

When the Fire Department was organized, he became a Fire Commissioner. In 1927 he ran for office and was elected Trustee of the Village of New Hyde Park and later served as the third Mayor. He was greatly respected and known for his hard work. He passed on in 1947.

hard work. Their family was living in the old Denton homestead and as they did not own the house and land, they had no say over their use and development. Charles worked on the farm until 1928 when Denton sold out to a developer. He found a new job with the Village of New Hyde Park as chief truck driver. Like his older brother, J. William, he joined the New Hyde Park Fire Department in 1915 and served in the Enterprise Hose Co. for over 50 years. In 1919 he married Agnes Hausch and built a house at 16 Herkomer Street. Charles and Agnes had two daughters–Irene Mae in 1920 and Lorraine in 1931.

In 1933, Agnes died, and Charles became a widower with two young daughters. Lorraine being only two years old at that time. His sister Amelia Elizabeth never married and was willing to move in and take care of the children and the household.

Obituaries

Charles C. Hoffman
Pioneer Farmer

Charles C. Hoffmann, 74, a life-long resident of New Hyde Park and member of one of the community's first farming families, died yesterday in Nassau Hospital, Mineola. He lived at 16 Herkimer Street.

Mr. Hoffman was the last surviving member of one of the original farming families in the New Hyde Park area. Before his retirement he was employed by the Village of New Hyde Park.

He was a 55-year member of the New Hyde Park Fire Department and former captain of Enterprise Engine Company, No. 1. Fire Department services will be held at 7:30 p.m. Monday at the New Hyde Park Funeral Home.

Mr. Hoffmann leaves two daughters, Mrs. Irene LaTorre of Bedford, Mass., Lorraine Hoffmann of New Hyde Park and two grandchildren.

After the girls grew up, Irene married and moved to Massachusetts. Lorraine still lives at 16 Herkomer Street. She is a retired physical education teacher.

Amelia Elizabeth Hoffmann

Amelia Elizabeth Hoffmann, as discussed, moved in with her brother Charles and helped raise his daughters after his wife passed away. Amelia never married.

Emil Hoffmann

Emil (1880-1938) was a farmer all his life. He first worked with his father and later on other farms. He never married.

Mary Louise Hoffmann

Mary Louise (1882-1912) remained single and died at the age of 30.

13 - The Bowen Family

When the first German settlers arrived in New Hyde Park, the Wilfred Bowen family was already well established on Long Island. They were of English descent and their lifestyle was of the upper class. They lived in a mansion and had their children privately educated.

George Bowen

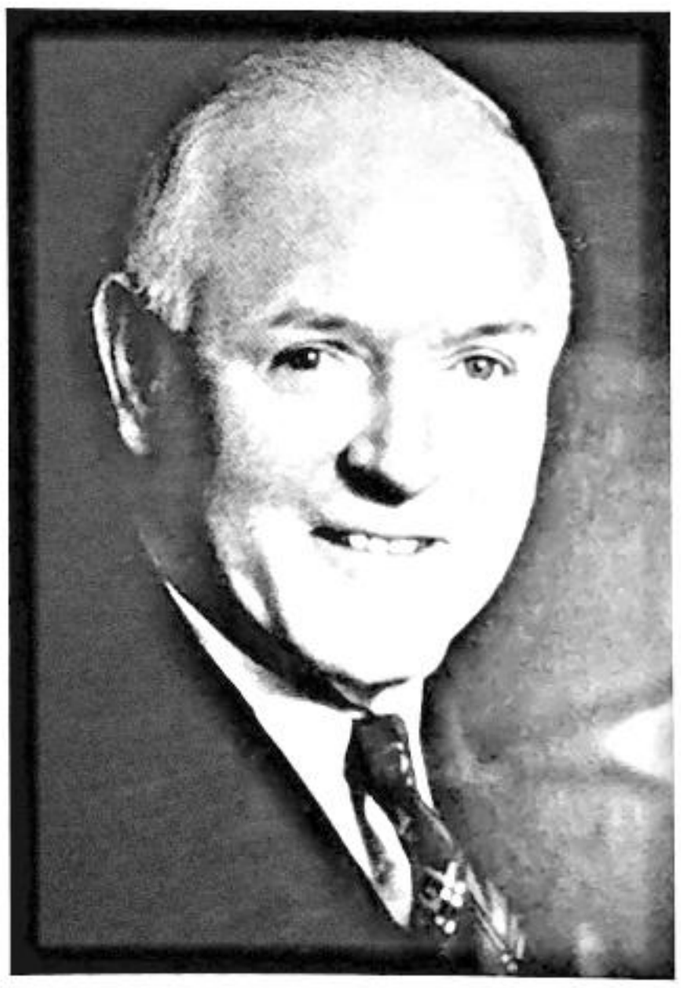
The Bowen's son George, who was born in 1868, loved animals and showed great interest in their care. He entered college and received a degree in veterinary medicine. His parents bought him a 5-acre plot to serve as grazing land and on which he established an animal hospital to care for the livestock of the surrounding farmers. The location was what is now Garden City Park and though the land is now developed, there is still an animal hospital on the site.

George was very well liked and, once the population grew and people acquired pets, "Doc Bowen" also took care of cats and dogs. Doc married in 1886, and he and his wife Etta had three children: Martha born in 1887, followed by Joseph and Wilfred born in 1894.

Wilfred H. Bowen

Unlike his father, Wilfred did not get a private education, but went to school in New Hyde Park. And, unlike his father, he was not interested in animals. But, he loved cars and, just like all young people, was fascinated by them. He became an auto-electrician and with his partner Collier formed a company: "Bowen-Collier, Auto Electrician." The firm was first located on his father's land, but later he moved it to Floral Park. Wilfred married in 1922 and settled with his bride on Herkomer Street. He bought an expensive car and was not only the first in New Hyde Park, but also for a very long time, the only car owner in the village.

Wilfred became the fourth mayor in New Hyde Park and the first one other than a German. He served in that office from 1947 to 1949. During World War I, he served as corporal in the 136th Aero Squad in Texas. He also was Vice President at the Fidelity Credit Union. He never moved from New Hyde Park where he passed away in 1970.



Hon. Wilfred H. Bowen,
Mayor of New Hyde Park (1947-1949).

14 - The Joerg Family

Contributed by Elaine Joerg Mangan

Leonard Joerg arrived in this country in 1870 from Munich, Germany at the age of 12. Leonard was one of the few of his brothers and sisters to keep the spelling of their name. Most of them changed it to Yerk. He married Augusta Marshall in 1880. Augusta came from Ermila, near Breslau in Germany. Their home on South 12th Street was built for them in 1889 for $1500. The family lived there all their lives except for the 10 years in Flowerfield, when George lived there.

Leonard Joerg was one of the pioneers in the growing of gladiolus and was considered the best informed man on the gladiolus in this country. One writer, wrote, "Long Island is known as the pioneer of the gladiolus industry and New Hyde Park should be rightly called the capitol." Leonard was a grower and breeder for the Hallocks of the Child's strain when the first of these were brought over from Europe. He worked for Hallock, Son & Thorpe for 19 years and when John Lewis Childs, Floral Park, took over the Hallocks' stock, Leonard remained with Childs for the next 25 years becoming their foreman. Ten years of that time was spent at the 150 acres of Childs in Flowerfield from 1910 to 1920.

It is not surprising that Leonard Joerg's family of boys took to the same work. When Leonard moved to Flowerfield, George J. decided to break away and hired a piece of ground in addition to the patch behind his father's house and set to work as a gladioli grower. His ability to supply sound, healthy bulbs, true to name, put him in good standing with the trade. In 1919 he secured 27 acres in north New Hyde Park and with the help of his three brothers, John, William and Leonard Jr., cleared the wooded area of the property. The father then severed his connection with Flowerfield, and with his experience of more than 40 years, became the president of George J. Joerg, Inc., at the age of 65.

A concrete block storage house was built for the storage of the bulbs during the winter months. Two pot-bellied stoves kept it warm enough for the bulbs. In 1921 a house was built across the street for George J. and Christina (Hensinger) Joerg, by a cousin's husband, John O'Hearn of Hicksville, for $4,600.

They grew more than 100 varieties of gl olus and were most proud of the Joerg White. It h seven full flowers in perfect condition, the lowe lower measuring 5 1/2 to 6 inches across. It was ar ahead of all others in size, form and purity of colo r. It won first prize in 1922, 1923 and 1924 from the New York Horticultural Society and the AGS Trophy from the American Gladiolus Society in 1924. Among other favorites were Joerg's Yellow, Arlene and George J. Joerg, a pretty salmon pink.

Flowers were shipped from the basement of 11 South 12th Street to the flower market in New York City. Cut flowers were also sold from 1810 New Hyde Park Road to retailers at 35 to 50 cents a dozen and to wholesalers for 20 to 25 cents a dozen. Bulbs were shipped around the world.

Joerg's New White

Long Island is known as the pioneer center of the gladiolus industry, and New Hyde Park should be rightly called the capitol.

Leonard Joerg is one of those pioneers. Over fifty years growing gladiolus. Starting in 1880 with Hallocks, where he remained for eighteen years, then twenty-five years with John Lewis Childs, gave him that knowledge that has enabled the firm of George J. Joerg, Inc., to become one of the foremost and largest growers in the country. The firm of George J. Joerg, Inc. was formed about ten years ago with Leonard Joerg as president. Four sons with him now constitute this company. Previous to the formation George J. Joerg, from whose name the present firm was named was engaged in the growing of gladiolus previous to the incorporation of the firm of George J. Joerg, Inc. Today they devote about twenty acres to the growing and development of this beautiful flower. 18 new varieties have been originated and put on the market, and several others are in process of development. The finest white gladiolus that is known (picture in this issue) was developed and put on the market, and is known as Joers's White, and has won many prizes where exhibited. Two other varieties that deserve mention are "Joerg's Yellow Prim" and "Joerg's Favorite". Their new catalogue, just off the press of "Publicity", lists over one hundred varieties, and it is yours for the asking. For those who want to start in a small way, they will send you an asortment of 100 bulbs for $2.00 or thirty for $1.00 (free delivery anywhere.) To those that wish to visit these gardens, they are located on New Hyde Park Road, about one half mile beyond the new school.

Wagner's Greenhouses

A visit to the immense greenhouses of Henry A. Wagner on the Lakeville Road is worth going miles to see.

Can you imagine 30,000 potted tulips all ready to bloom for Easter, or 5,000 potted lilies, which will be in bloom when you read this article? Not alone are lilies and tulips shown, but thousands of rose bushes, hydrangeas, hyacinths, cinerarias, geraniums, phoenix palms, rubber plants, cacti and ferns. One house is devoted to vegetable plants and bedding plants. Mr. Wagner has spent his whole life growing flowers and does a big wholesale as well as retail business. To see a show worth seeing visit his greenhouses on Sunday or any other day, and you will find it time well spent.

Thirty-five Years a Florist

Thirty-five years a florist and still going strong. Emil Burklin, the subject of this sketch, has been a florist all his life, or since he was big enough to work. Six years ago he came to Garden City Park and built two large greenhouses; since then he has erected five more that are filled to overflowing. His slogan "If it is Flowers, we grow them", is no misrepresentation. One house which is devoted almost exclusively to cinerarias is one magnificent sight; every color imaginable is shown. Carnations, roses, lilies and tulips, thousands of them, are shown. Vegetable and bedding plants are also grown in great varieties and in wholesale trade is extensive. Cut flowers and designs he specializes in and can fill your order at short notice. Visitors are welcome at any time and he is glad to show you around. You should see this flower show before Easter, while the stock is complete, as after that time some kinds will be sold out.

Joerg Service Station.
Corner of Hillside Avenue and New Hyde Park Road

When Hillside Avenue was constructed in the 1930's, it split the farm in half. The Joerg's then built a service station on the Northwest corner which was operated by Leonard Jr. Leonard had lived with George for a time and went to the Brunswick Mechanics School in Brooklyn and fixed cars in his father's garage. He previously used his ability to repair and maintain the farm equipment. The service station is still in existence.

As the demand for housing moved east, the Joerg family gradually sold pieces of the farm, but maintained an area in the back and side of the service station as a nursery. In 1943 the Army Coast Artillery had a Barrage Balloon Battalion stationed a short distance from the farm. They were there to protect Sperry Gyroscope Co. from an aerial attack. They were there only a short time, and houses were built over the same area. The homeowners became regular customers of the nursery, which now sold trees, plants, bushes, seeds and flowers. With the coming of home building, it became impossible to rent land for the rotation of the gladiolus. Shortly after the death of George J. Joerg, the nursery was closed.

Leonard Joerg was patient, friendly, soft spoken, with a good sense of humor. He and Augusta raised chickens for home use in Flowerfield. He was a devoted husband and father. Leonard was not only a gladiolus genius, he was also hybridizing lilies, peonies and seedlings of all kinds. While working for John Lewis Childs, he introduced varieties of gladiolus that were bread winners for commercial florists, one of which he named, Augusta, after his wife. They were loving parents to their seven children. Leonard was also a volunteer fireman in New Hyde Park.

George and his brothers and sisters went to the little old white school house on New Hyde Park Road. He was shortstop on the village baseball team. George served on the election board for many years and also ran for office on one occasion. He and Christina were a devoted couple and worked side by side

Village Pioneer Passes Away

Leonard Joerg, one of the oldest residents of New Hyde Park, passed away at his home on South 12th Street, Wednesday.

Mr. Joerg was one of the pioneer residents of the Village, always popular and well liked. He specialized for years in the propagation of gladioli bulbs, and similar horticultural work. Mr. Joerg's hobby was the collection of Indian relics, and minerals, and the collection ranks high in both interest and value.

Surviving him are four sons, George J., Leonard C., John and William—and three daughters, Pauline, Elsie and Augusta.

Interment will be Sunday, April 24th.

when it was necessary. The flowers would be cut early in the morning and Christina was ready to sell them on the porch or in the basement, many times with the assistance of their daughter Violet. Christina was President of the Ladies Aid Society and sang in the Minstrel Shows in the Presbyterian Church with daughter, Violet. She was a great cook, made root beer and even made cakes for the Army boys stationed nearby. George and Christina had three children: Marion, who married Edward Skrent; Violet, who married Gordon Pike; and Elaine, who married Jeremiah Mangan and had three children– Robert, George and Patricia.

John was a jolly person. He liked baseball as his brothers did and was right-handed pitcher for the New Hyde Park Baseball Team. He liked wild duck hunting and fishing for food along with his brothers. John was devoted to his family and helped to take care of the family house and gardens when he was not working in the fields or bulb house.

Brother William was a little more serious than John and he also liked baseball. He went into the Army during World War I and was stationed at Camp Upton. Bill liked to go to Jamaica on Saturday nights to the movies and he would bring home goodies for his sisters. The cookies and candy were deli[illegible]us. After he retired from the nursery he worked [illegible]art time for George Christ for a short while.

Pauline (Lena) loved her family and helped her mother, Augusta, take care of all the household chores, eventually taking care of her brothers and sisters and running the house for them. She sang and played the piano with a light touch and liked to entertain on weekends. She was fun to be with and an excellent cook.

Augusta (Gussie or Dolly) also played piano and sang. She worked as a secretary for John Lewis Childs in Flowerfield. On returning to New Hyde Park she helped Pauline with the housework.

Elsie worked as Postmaster in Flowerfield and played the organ in St. James Church. She worked for Lilco, in Mineola, as a supervisor until she retired. Elsie also helped her sisters in her spare time and would take members of her family for a drive in the afternoon or evening. They would visit Uncle John Yerk in Plainview, Uncle Bill Marshall in Flowerfield, cousin Jack at Jack Yerk's Bathing Beach in Lake Ronkonkoma or other relatives or friends. She also said she could drive a horse and buggy and ride a bicycle.

Leonard Jr. had a love for mechanics. He rode a motorcycle, had a car with a rumble seat and would drive anywhere, anytime, in the early days. He had a great sense of humor and had many friends. Lenny married Mae Schellentraeger and they had three children: Marlene, who married Gregory Fengarinus; Joan, who married Charles Johnson; and Leonard, who married Stephanie Panzerelli. They lived at 600 Lowell Avenue in the house built by cousin Amelia's husband, Arthur Klahn. Many good times were had there. Marlene's children are: Gregory, Charles, and John. Joan's children are: Charles, Debarah, Richard and Kenneth. Leonard Jr. met his lovely wife through Christina Joerg's friends, Charles and Louise Schellentraeger. When they met, Mae was working in New York City for the Equitable Life Insurance Company.

NOTE: Toward the end of the last century New Hyde Park was known throughout the country for its greenhouses. Florists were not only growing, but also hybridizing gladiolas, roses, carnations, crysanthemums, begonias and dahlias. In addition to the Joerg families, there were the Baer brothers– Charles, George and Herman; the Osczapinski family was specializing in carnations; huge greenhouses were owned by the Domanoski, Postek, Mockawetch and Schackleitz families; and the Kerrigan family was growing perennials in open fields.

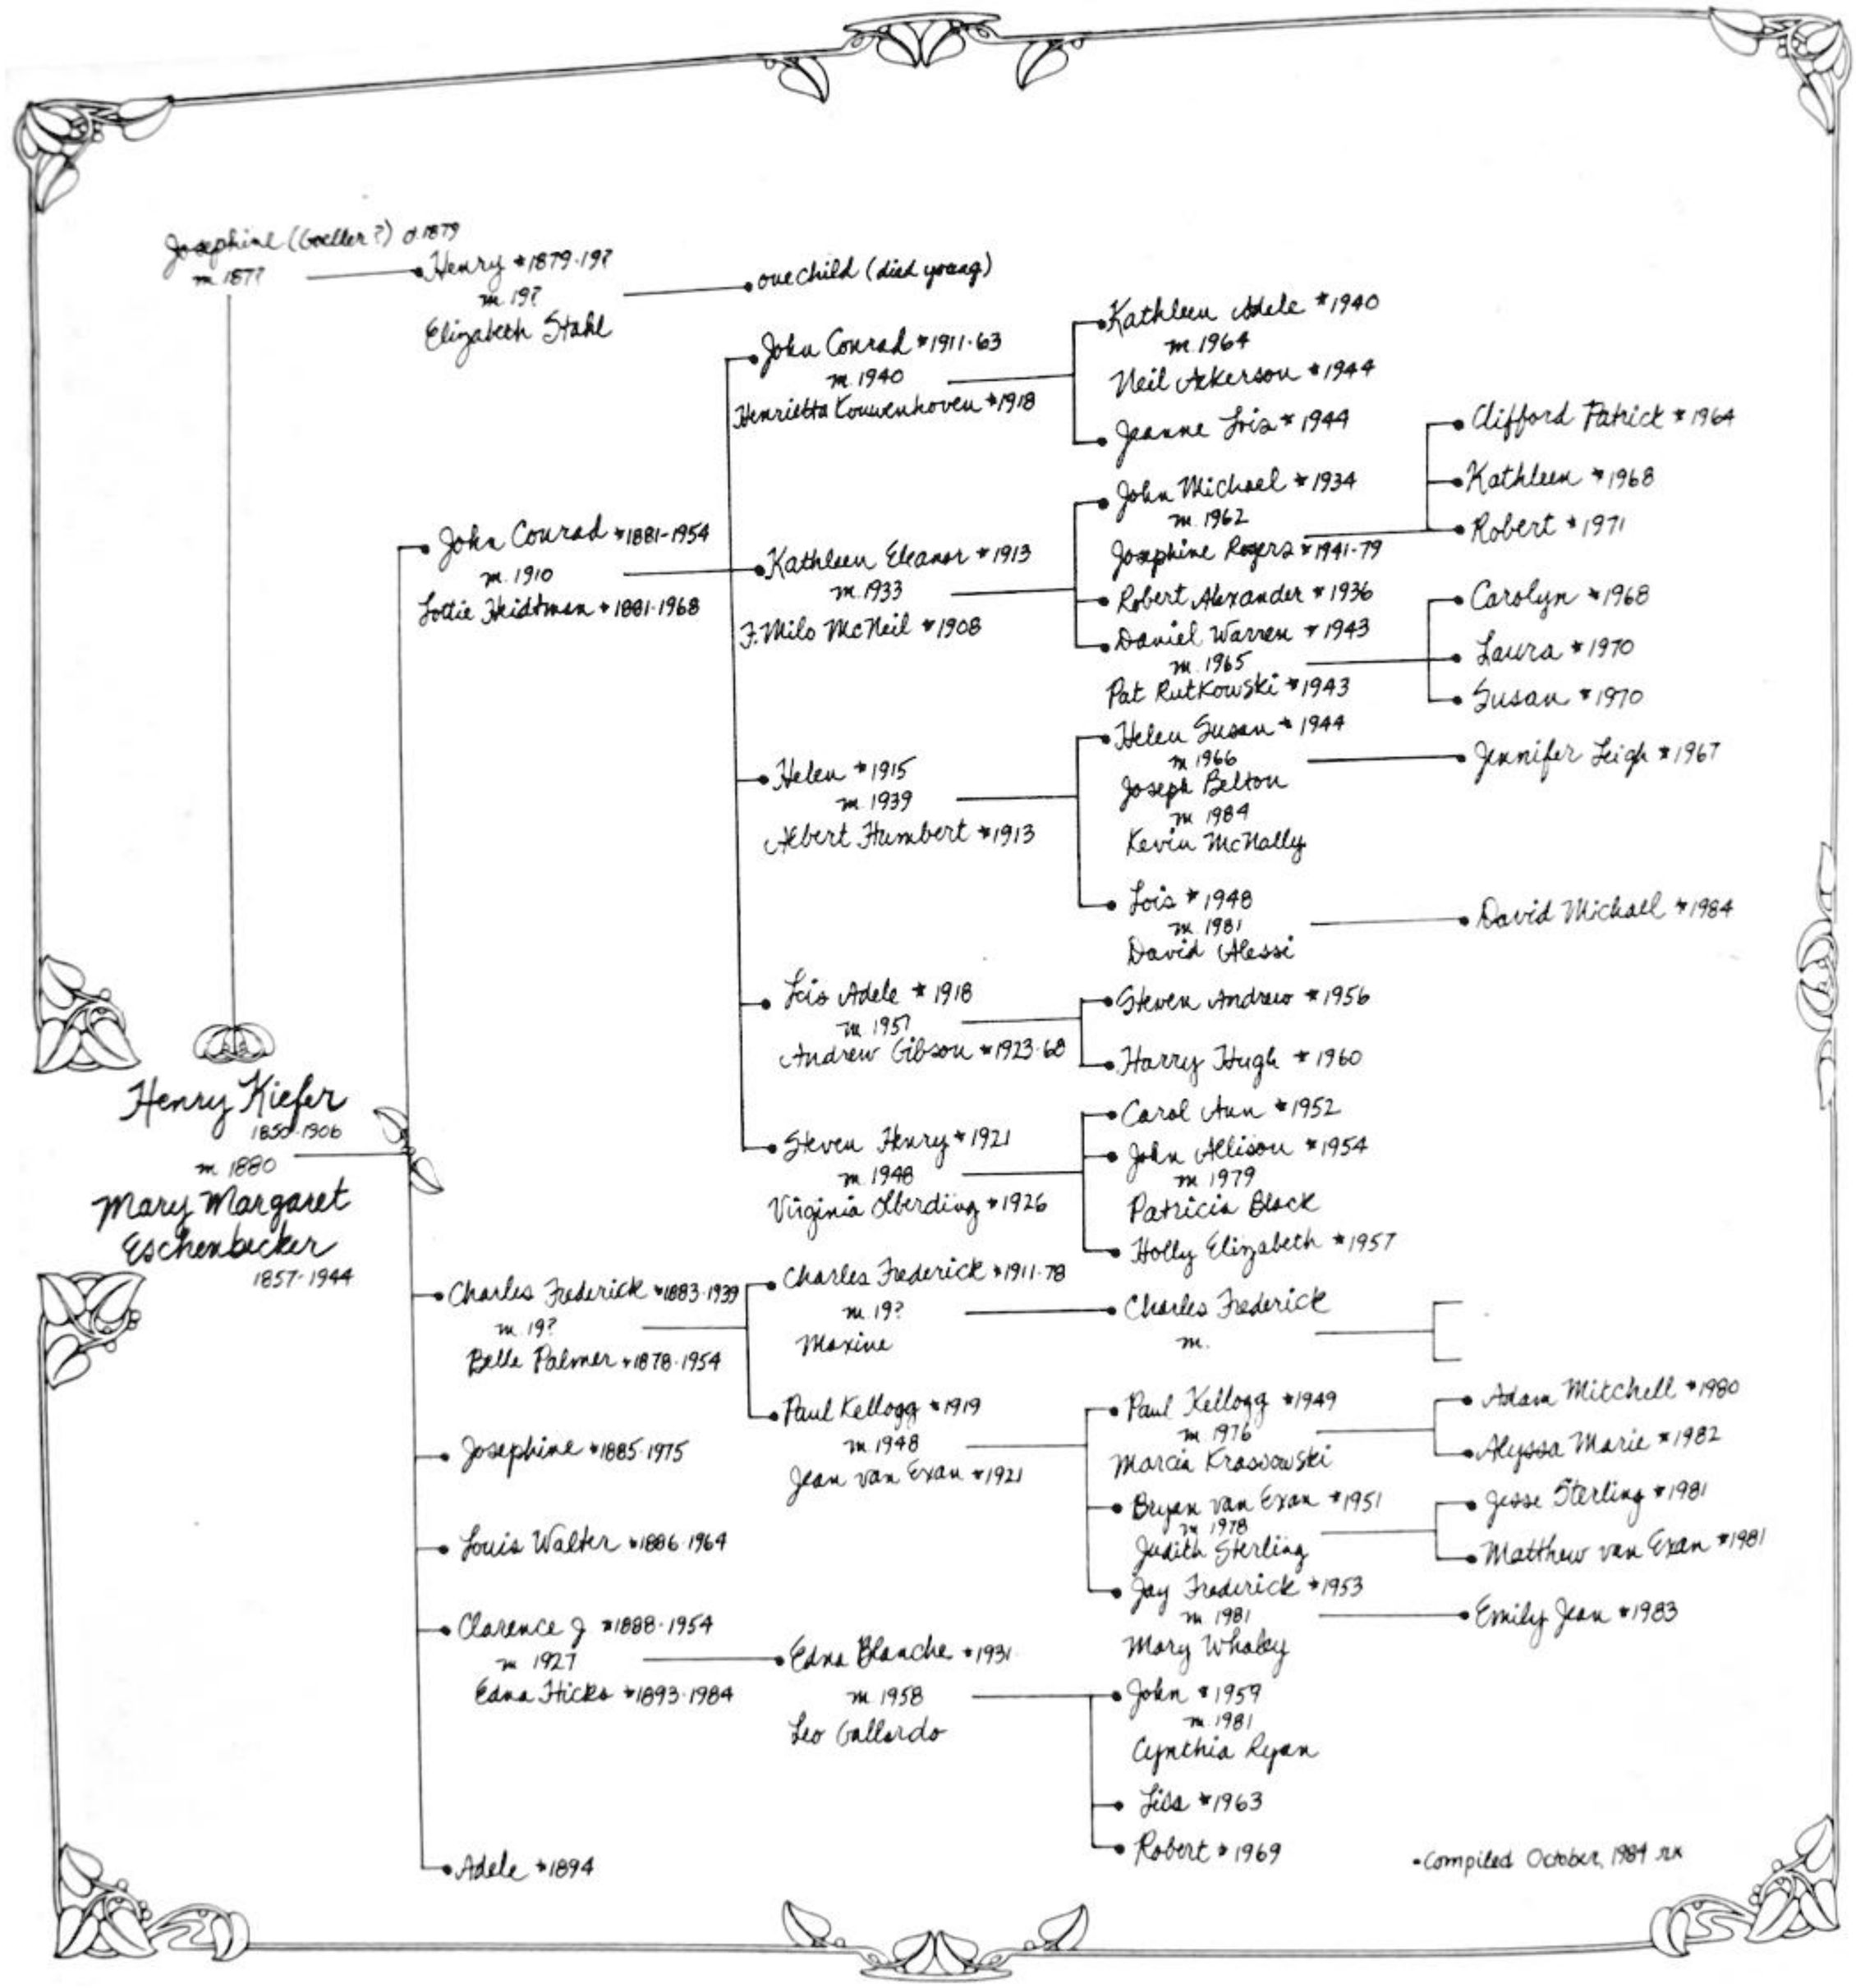
The Kiefer-Eschenbecker Family



15 - The Kiefer-Eschenbecker Family

Early Family History

Information gathered by Jeanne Kiefer for the family celebration of Adele Kiefer's 90th birthday (November 13, 1984).

This story begins with a little three-year old girl, Maria Margaretha Eschenbecker, who left the town of Kragelstein, in Bavaria, Germany, about 1860. She and her family came to America on a sailing ship. The trip took about three months. (Jeanne Kiefer has a painted pine trunk with a handmade lock that came over with the family.)

Besides her father (Konrad) and mother (Margaret?), Maria had three sisters (Maggie, Laura and Fannie) and three brothers (Charlie, John and Fred). They all lived in a big, rambling white farmhouse on their farm, just south of the village of Jamaica, Queens. (Aunt Delle believes the major crop was potatoes.) There is a family photo of Konrad picking apples on the farm.

Family tradition has it that the Eschenbeckers left Germany to avoid the wars. They were very disconcerted when the American Civil War broke out just one year after they arrived!

While Maria was growing up on Long Island, a young man, Heinrich Kiefer, was learning the harness trade in a little town in Hesse, Germany, called Marienborn. (This town, just south of Mainz, and was visited after WWII by Charles Kiefer and in 1966 by Jeanne Kiefer. Almost 100 years after Heinrich left, the descendents of his family knew all about the American branch and were very interested in news of us all!)

Although family tradition claims Heinrich snuck out of Germany to avoid military service, his papers include a commendation from the Kaiser for his "loyal service" during the 1870-71 Franco-Prussian War. He received a noncombatant medal for his service to the 2nd Mounted Regiment. The paper mentions no rank, so perhaps Heinrich was employed by the regiment as a civilian harness-maker. Photographs, however, do show him in a military uniform.

In any case, we believe that Heinrich came to America in 1873. He must have been about 23 years old. About the same time, three of his brothers also immigrated: John, Chris and Peter (who returned to Germany). Several sisters remained in Germany.

Heinrich settled in New Hyde Park, in what was then Queens County. So did Chris, who kept a tavern, and John, who had a farm on Hempstead Turnpike. Earlier, most of this area was a large farm owned by the Kelsey family. The town began when the Kelsey farm was broken up and sold to many owners in the 1870s. The Ingrahams had a large house in the neighborhood, as did an exiled Englishman named Cobbett. He named his estate "Hyde Park," and the area was so called by the locals.

Heinrich married a young women named Josephine (Goeller?), who died in childbirth in 1879. The son lived to become Heinrich, Jr. (Family tradition says Heinrich named his first daughter, Josephine, after this first wife. Aunt Venie was her father's favorite, recalls Aunt Delle.)

Heinrich, now 29 and with an infant son to raise, considered returning to Germany. Instead, he remarried within the year. The story goes that he spotted three of the Eschenbecker girls at the train station. His friend, Mr. Goeller, who owned a Jamaica hotel and knew many of the German immigrants, introduced him to the Eschenbecker family. The girls hid behind a curtain while the subject of marriage was broached, trying to get a peek at the suitor and wondering which girl was being discussed. The arranged marriage was with Maria, then 23, and took place in the German Reform St. Paul's Church in Jamaica, in May 1880.

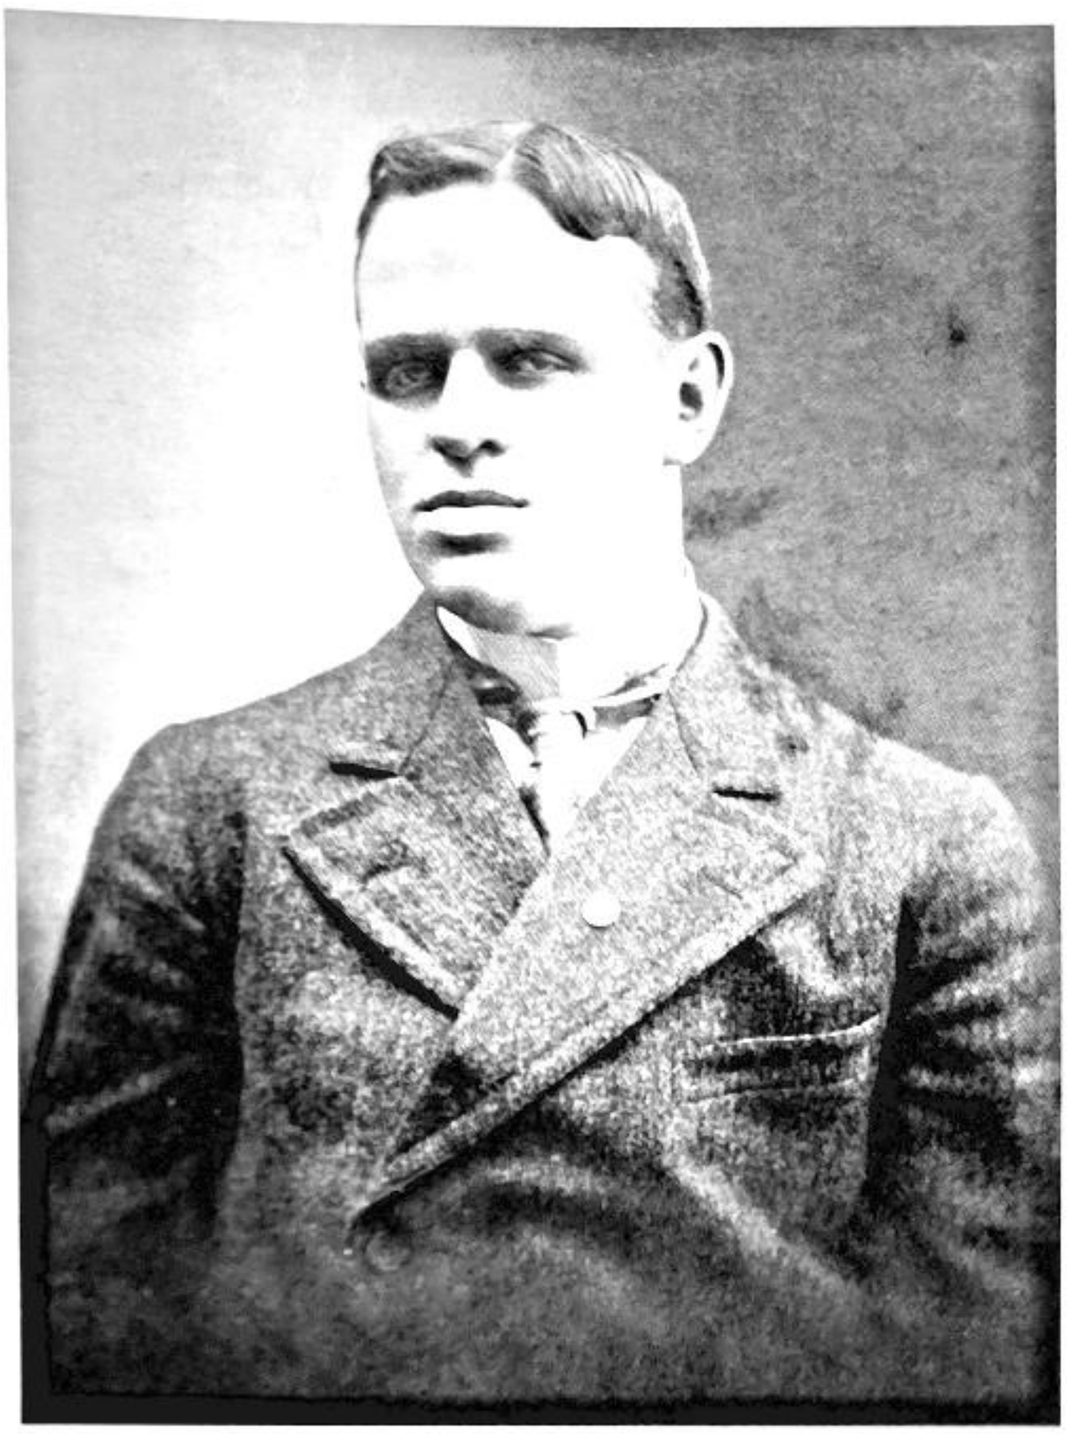
The next year was a very busy one for the young couple. In February 1881, they paid $600 for a parcel of the old Kelsey farm on Jericho Turnpike. (They bought a second parcel for $110 in 1891.) On the mortgage, the Justice of the Peace affirms he questioned Maria "apart from her husband" to make sure she entered the agreement "of her own free will and accord without fear or compulsion from her husband." In July 1881, their first child John Conrad was born. In September, Heinrich, now officially Henry, became a U.S. citizen.

The young family first lived in a rented house a bit east of the house we know. It burned down sometime after John was born. A family story about the fire says Henry threw a trunk of dishes out the upstairs window but carried down the featherbeds. The present house at 1200 Jericho Turnpike was built soon after and contained Henry's harness shop as well as the living quarters. It was a two-family house, and the families of Henry's workers often lived in the other half of the house.

Henry's shop fronted on Jericho Turnpike, a wide dirt road that was one of the few major roads on Long Island at that time. (Mary paid an assessment of $575 in 1931 to have the road widened!) The Turnpike went from the town of Jericho to the farmers' markets in Long Island City, and many farmers' carts traveled the route every day. Henry Kiefer's shop catered to these farmers. (As did Chris Kiefer's tavern, across the street!) The farmers would stop on their way to and from the market for repairs or to order new equipment. The work done in the shop must have been top quality, because the superintendents of the Whitney and Vanderbilt stables patronized Henry Kiefer. Mary sewed horse blankets for the business on a factory sewing machine.

Henry and Mary's family grew quickly. Mary soon had four more children, each two years apart. In 1883, Charles Frederich (the family extrovert, according the Aunt Delle) was born. Then came Josephine, Louis Walter and Clarence. After a gap of six years, the last child, Adele, was born in 1894. Mary was 37, Henry 44.



1909 - Walter L. Kiefer

The town these children knew was a small, agricultural community. Farms bordered the Turnpike. In 1883, the Kiefers helped found the First Reformed Church in town. (Henry had been a Catholic in Germany. When the local priest urged him to have his children baptized Catholic one day, he replied, "They're in the back. Go back and do it." The priest refused, and the children grew up to regularly attend the Protestant church with their parents. Aunt Delle recalls earning a nickel for polishing her father's Sunday shoes.) Gradually, the town expanded and grew. Since there was only an elementary school in New Hyde Park, the children went to Jamaica High School, living on the Eschenbecker farm while they attended. Aunt Delle remembers visiting the farm with her mother, driving from New Hyde Park in the buggy behind Daisy, their horse. (The farm was sold when Grandma Eschenbecker died.) She also recalls wonderful trips into New York City on snowy winter evenings - in a sleigh! In those days, snow wasn't plowed aside. Instead, it was heaped up onto the road to facilitate sleigh travel.

Aunt Delle recalls her "Papa" was a quiet, reserved man. She believes he spoke German except when business demanded English. He taught his trade to all his sons. Henry, Jr. and John were in their mid-20's when their father had a serious illness during the bitter winter of 1905. He recovered, but his doctor warned him that he was weakened and might not survive another hard winter. He died a year later, probably of pneumonia. He was 57.

Henry Jr. and John took over the harness shop. Henry brought in a new sideline–bicycles. But he and John fell out, and Henry went off to Mineola to start his own harness shop. The building he built still stands on Jericho Turnpike. Charles also married and moved away. He eventually raised his family in Ilion, New York, where he worked for the Remington Arms Company. (His brother John and family drove up to see him once and the trip took two days.) In 1910, John married and moved his family into the family home. He rented half the house from his mother, while she and her unmarried children (Josephine, Louis Walter, Clarence and Adele) lived in the other half. John's children remember a great deal of interaction between the two family groups.

Josephine visited her Kiefer relatives in Germany in 1913. (Her Uncle Johnny had visited there earlier and inspired the visit.) She was nearly caught in WWI. Her two brothers, Louis Walter and Clarence, both served in France during WWI, me unex-pectedly over there. (The family traditio king Uncle Walter's condition to mustard gas ng the war seems to be a misconception. Aunt V claimed he was "just never the same" after a sever ildhood illness – scarlet fever?)

After the War, things changed at 1200. Clarence married and moved to Mineola. He worked in the County Assessor's office there. Josephine, inspired by the war effort, decided to train as a nurse at Wickoff Hospital in Brooklyn. She later worked some years at that hospital. Later, she cared for private patients on Long Island. (Including Sam Fox, the movie mogul, who "ate fat," she told a surprised Aunt Delle.) Adele attended secretarial school and became a stenographer, eventually working for the old law firm of Lord, Day and Lord in Manhattan.

On a rail trip west with her Eschenbecker cousins, Adele decided to stay and work in California. "I won't go back until I've seen Hawaii and Alaska," she told her family. She lived in Los Angeles from 1923-26. She missed Alaska, but did sail to Hawaii for a visit in 1924.

Family tradition has it that Mary decided to build the Garden City house in order to lure Adele back to Long Island. Adele did return and started working at Sinclair Oil in 1926. (She retired in 1959, after 33 years with the company.) In 1927, Mary, Josephine, Louis Walter and Adele move into their Greenridge Avenue home.

Mary Kiefer died there in 1944, at the age of 87. She and Henry are buried in the family plot in Greenfield Cemetery, Hempstead.

1909 - John G. Kiefer

John Kiefer will not be seen in his shop any more. He died this morning. For some weeks now the store has been closed and a "For Sale" sign in the window heralded the coming change. Unhappily for us all he is irreplaceable. For more than half a century he stood in the windows there at his work, deep in the hearts of every boy and girl who grew up in this village. He was standing there making harness with his father and his brothers when I was born just around the corner. He fixed my pony bridle and my book strap when I was a boy and he sold me bicycles for my growing family in later years.

At first, he looked out upon the country market road where only horses and wagons moved. Some by two horse trucks carrying the produce of our Island to the great markets in New York and some were light rigs in local trade society. Most of them were using harness made in his father's shop. The fields across the street were open, ploughed and green to feed the great city.

Each day working his knives and punching his needle and his awl he grew to manhood in this country village. And he saw the changes come. They came literally before his eyes, for by the nature of his working place he was always at the window of the world looking as it moved by. He saw the green fields go. He saw the trolley come before his door and perish almost in its first breath. The novel contraption, the automobile, grew from a toy to be the whole thing. The cars swished by and the massive motor trucks rumbled the very foundations of his house. The trolleys, the market wagons, the light rigs and the harness business all went off the street to the museums. John Kiefer adapted himself to the change and he built a new business still at the old stand, bicycles, sporting goods, odds and ends.

What kind of a man was this John Kiefer? He was a little hard to define. He was a philosopher but he was not complicated. He was an avaricious reader and he had a prodigious memory. Little that he ever knew did he forget.

He was interested in events everywhere and for me he was like a magnet. I could seldom pass his shop without a word or two, for he was a man of wisdom. It was the wisdom of the Bible, of the folk song of Chaucer and John Bunyan. Its principle ingredient was an elemental, piercing Lincolnian common sense, a fascination to every person with whom he spoke.

I sat with him each week as a director of the Bank of New Hyde Park for twenty-five years and he was invaluable as a companion and a sagacious official. He was a member of our Board of Education and strong timber in his Church. John Kiefer was an honest man, of great character and he spoke out on public questions.

He said to me once, "Marcus, you know the Village has no characters anymore, they have all gone on." He named some and he was referring to men of distinctive individuality and strength who held your interest in an indefinable way, men who took you to their heart and held you close, who in trouble were rocks to rest upon, men who nourished the mind and helped recharge the well springs of energy. John Kiefer was such a man, and his statement to me on the passing of characters is truer now than when he said it.

Did I say John Kiefer will not be seen in his shop anymore? Well, that is true for those who never knew him, but for all of us of whom he became a part, who talked with him and loved him, we shall see him always standing there as we pass his place.

Recollections of Life at the Jericho Turnpike house

by Helen Kiefer Humbert, October 1984

The turnpike house was just two family. Grandma, Aunt Venie, Aunt Delle, Uncle Walter, and Uncle Clarence were on one side, and Papa (John C. Kiefer Sr.), Mama and us five kids were on the other. The shop was in between.

On the property was a summer kitchen and outhouse. We had a cherry tree, black walnut tree, grape arbor, blackberry bushes, peach orchard and the chicken yard. Grandma grew many vegetables in the garden.

On Easter, we made little nests out of excelsior all around the yard on Saturday. Very early Easter morning, Papa hid the eggs. We never saw any laying of the eggs, so, when we had our baskets and went gathering, it was very exciting. Some eggs always got broken.

Our Christmas was like this: we never saw the tree until Christmas morning. We all got dressed, even shoes, and lined up at the top of the stairs - youngest first. We were very excited and tried hard to be patient. We went down the stairs, along the long hall and into the living room. We stood there oohing and awing. We always got a book, some clothes (like a suede jacket), some toys, games and maybe jewelry.

Christmas dinner was always on Grandma's side. She made homemade noodles in her chicken soup, and kids ate nothing else. There was always a goose and a turkey too. She always seemed to have a housefull.

In the evening, everybody stood around the tree while Papa, with pails of water standing by, lighted the candles on the tree.

We had a happy, sheltered childhood.

OUR FORMER PUBLIC LIBRARY

Prominent Citizens Were Active Members

The proposal of a public library for New Hyde Park brings to memory some of the efforts of civic workers of many years ago to establish such an institution.

At various times the Woman's Civic Club, the Men's Club and the Board of Trade were behind such a movement, and finally a public library asociation was formed.

Many books were donated, others were bought. The first distribution was made from Richert's Pharmacy, and continued for several years.

Finally the store in the Kiefer building was rented, and for a long time Miss Helen Kiefer was the librarian, assisted by other willing workers.

There was a large list of yearly subscribing members, but the rents and other expenses soon ate up the fund of over $500 the association had accumulated, and with but few readers and the apathy of the public the association finally closed up shop and the books were stored away.

Those who were prominent in the Association at various times were Judge Marcus G. Christ, who was the president, Miss Eva Simon, of blessed memory, Mrs. William Bowie, William Paradis, Rev. David C. Weidner, Mrs. Philip J. Christ, William Bowie, Mrs. George Christ, Postmaster Flinn, and many others.

Although activities ceased, it is said that the original association is still in existence, and in order to obtain the stored books for the new movement it will be necessary for the old board of meet and act
osition.

Kragelstein, Germany

Comments from Josephine Kiefer on her mother's (Mary Margaret Eschenbecker) birthplace, sent during the visit of 1913 to Germany.

Kragelstein is wonderful beyond words. Sands Point has stones but nothing like those I saw today. I wish I had a week to wander about here, the sky is so blue after the rain we had, the grass so green and the trees. Words fail me. I am near heaven while here but far away at other times!

Christopher Kiefer

Chris was one of four brothers who came to America around 1870. Chris and Heinrich settled in New Hyde Park. John started a farm in Hempstead and Peter returned to Germany. Like many of the Germans in our area, Heinrich and Chris went into business for themselves. Heinrich opened up a harness shop and Chris bought a large plot of land on Jericho Turnpike, southwest from South 12th Street. He built a large building on the corner to house a tavern with a bowling alley. It was just a one lane alley, but was the very first one in New Hyde Park. There was so much traffic on Jericho Turnpike with all the farmers going to market, that all of the local inns could make a living, especially when they had stables for the horses. Chris built a large stable next to the house and his wife took care of the kitchen. Business went well, till the prohibition. The tavern and bowling alley were discontinued and the ground floor was subdivided and rented out to "Plesser's Hardware" on the corner. Next to it he rented to "Thos. Roulston's" grocery store. Son, Willie Kiefer converted the stables and started a radio shop with Ed Hausch. He rented the space next to it to Ralph Kun for use as a barber shop. The barber was successful, but Willies business was failing, so after the prohibition, he closed the radio store and started a tavern in his father's old place.

Roulston's was already closed, Plessers moved up the turnpike and Willie modernized the whole building. He expanded it several feet, added a brick front, modern plumbing and a six lane bowling alley.

The building stood into the late 1950s when it was bought by the Roosevelt Savings Bank, then demolished and a modern bank building was erected.

Like most families in New Hyde Park, the Kiefers married other locals. Willie's sister Viola was the wife of Alfred Flynn who was fire chief in New Hyde Park and the son of Postmaster Jack Flynn.

MRS. KIEFER DIES IN FALL

NEW HYDE PARK—An autopsy was performed at Meadowbrook Hospital today by Medical Examiner Theodore Curphy to determine the cause of death of Mrs. Sophie Kiefer, 56, a widow, who died instantly when she fell on the ice in front of her home at 11 North 11th street Saturday night.

Mrs. Kiefer was on her way to a neighbor's home when it is believed she either became suddenly ill or slipped on the ice. She was found by passersby, who notified police.

Mrs. Kiefer is the mother of Viola Kiefer, with whom she lived, and William F. Kiefer, proprietor of a bowling alley on Jericho turnpike. She was a resident of this village 40 years.

Services will be held at her home Thursday at 2 P. M. and burial will take place in Greenfield Cemetery.

David Plesser, 79, Innovative LI Appliance Dealer

By Gary Witherspoon
STAFF WRITER

Before discount appliance dealers offered "insane" prices and "unbeatable" deals, Floral Park native David Plesser was carving his unusual sales niche on Long Island.

Mr. Plesser died from an embolism Dec. 28 after collapsing in his Palm Beach, Fla., home. Services were held recently in Great Neck. He was 79.

He helped develop the concepts of instant credit and one-hour delivery, according to his brother, Morton, of Woodmere. Mr. Plesser turned his appliance business over to his brother about 16 years ago and then worked 10 years as national sales manager of Pentax cameras, a division of Honeywell Corp. He retired in 1988.

He was the eldest of five children of the late Samuel and Frieda Plesser and was reared in New Hyde Park. He graduated from Hempstead High School and then the University of North Carolina with a degree in business administration.

After college, he returned to Long Island and worked in his father's New Hyde Park hardware store. Mr. Plesser then enlisted in the Army and became a lieutenant in the Corps of Engineers, serving in World War II.

After the war, Mr. Plesser opened his first discount appliance store in New Hyde Park. He married the former Ann Nierenberg of Great Neck.

When Newsday began publication more than 50 years ago, Mr. Plesser was one of the first to take a chance and advertise in the fledgling newspaper. The newspaper's growth paralleled his own and, eventually, he was operating seven stores. Today, the business is centralized in Babylon.

David Targe, retired executive vice president of marketing for Newsday, recalled that Mr. Plesser "was one of the first appliance dealers to use Newsday to reach out to the market. Plesser's was one of the leading stores which showed how to get full usage out of Newsday. The store had a reputation for credibility and integrity."

Mr. Plesser foresaw the population boom in Suffolk County and expanded his business into the area, Targe said. He also was one of the first advertisers to use his own picture in ads.

He was a member of the Masonic temple in Woodhaven and past president of the Jewish Center of the Hamptons, his brother said.

He was relaxing at home after a round of golf when he was stricken, according to his brother.

In addition to his wife and brother, survivors include two daughters, Susan Brenner of Baltimore and Nancy Wendell of East Hampton, and two sisters, Natalie Schulz of Great Neck and Blanche Berkman of Myrtle Beach, S.C.

Funeral services were held Dec. 30 at Riverside-Nassau North Chapels in Great Neck; burial was in Beth David Cemetery in Elmont.

FRANCIS XAVIER MILLER FAMILY TREE

16 - The Miller Clan

Early Family History

by Eleanor (Miller) Walters

In 1858, my grandfather, Frank Miller, was born in Frankfurt, Germany, the youngest brother of Philip J. Miller. He immigrated to America at the tender age of 13 and lived with his brother Philip in New Hyde Park. A carpenter by trade, he worked many hours as a helper to the master carpenter of the surrounding areas. In 1885, he worked on the building which was known as "Philip J. Miller Hall & General Store," which is today "Henry's Inn" at the corner of Jericho Turnpike and Millers Lane.

In 1887, he met, fell in love with, and married my grandmother, Louise Felton, in St. Boniface Church, Elmont. They lived in a big, rambling white house an the corner of Jericho Turnpike and Herkomer Street. The house had three stories, 8 rooms, plus an attic. It also had a beautiful open porch which wrapped itself around from the front clear around the entire one side of the house. It was great to play on that porch when we were kids! There was also a beautiful great big lush lawn and flowers too! That lawn was another wonderful place to play. Now that he was married grandfather's responsibilities increased, so he found employment in Floral Park, where John Lewis Childs was developing the community and needed carpenters to build a hotel and living quarters for the many employees of his large seed company. Also, at this, Mr. J. Stewart was developing a large track of land which he called Garden City, just east of New Hyde Park, which provided more work for grandfather. The family gradually increased by six children - William, Phillip, John - also called Dick, Frank (my Dad), Anna, and Edward. Grandpa also had many chores at home, chickens to feed, a vegetable garden to tend, etc. His means of transportation was a horse.

Now for the children as they grew into adulthood. William owned and operated an automotive station in Manhasset; Phillip had a Buick dealership with a showroom on Jericho Turnpike and Tulip Avenue, Floral Park; John enlisted in the U. S. Navy during WWI; Frank was employed by L. I. Lighting Co., as a meter reader before he enlisted in the U. S. Army, American Expeditionary Forces, Third Infantry

Frank Miller

Mrs. Louise Miller

NEW HYDE PARK—Services will be held Saturday with a requiem mass at 10 a. m. at the R. C. Church of the Holy Ghost, Jericho turnpike, here, for Mrs. Louise Felten Miller, 75, who died Tuesday at her home, 13-24 Jericho turnpike.

Death was due to influenza contracted as final plans were being made on Jan. 18 for a dinner to celebrate the golden wedding anniversary of Mrs. Miller and her husband, Frank.

The couple were marrried 50 years ago at St. Boniface R. C. Church, Elmont.

She was a member of the Holy Rosary Society.

Mrs. Miller is survived by her husband, Frank; five sons, William of Manhasset; John, of Stewart Manor; Frank Jr., of Floral Park; Philip and Edward Miller, of New Hyde Park, and a daughter, Mrs. Daniel Stenson, of New Hyde Park.

The Rev. Joseph Reichert, assistant pastor of the church, will celebrate the mass. Interment will be in St. Boniface Cemetery, Elmont.

Arrangements are under the direction of Thomas F. Dalton of Floral Park.

BRIDESMAIDS OF 1887 TO BE FETE COUPLE ON GOLDEN WEDDING

Millers Will Be Honored at New Hyde Park Dinner Tonight

NEW HYDE PARK.—Two bridesmaids, who in 1887 attended the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Miller, will tonight attend the couple's golden wedding anniversary at 1324 Jericho turnpike, here.

The bridesmaids who assisted at the wedding 50 years ago in the St. Boniface R. C. Church, Elmont, are Mrs. Anna Fensterer, wife of Dr. G. E. Fensterer of Garden City, and Anna Harrison of Floral Park.

Mrs. Miller, now 75, is the former Louise Felten, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Felten, formerly of Elmont road and Southern State parkway, Elmont. Mr. Miller, who is 78, was born in Frankfort, Germany, and is the youngest brother of Philip Miller, 94, founder of this village. Frank Miller came to America alone at 13 and joined his brother, Philip, in New Hyde Park.

Present will be Mr. and Mrs. William Miller of Manhasset, Mr. and Mrs. John Miller of Stewart Manor, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Miller Jr. of Floral Park, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Miller, Edward Miller, vice-president of the New Hyde Park Bank, and Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Stenson of New Hyde Park.

Also Mr. and Mrs. John Seidler, Mrs. Mary Barb and Mrs. Margaret Felton of Valley Stream, Philip Miller of New Hyde Park, Eleanor, James and Joel Miller of Floral Park and Bernard Fensterer of Garden City.

The Millers have received a congratulatory letter from President Roosevelt.

Top Right: January 18, 1937 Article.
Bottom: January 18, 1937 - Golden wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Francis Miller.
The bride Louise is missing in the picture. She died shortly before the party.

Division, Corps. of Sixth Engineers and served overseas in combat for better then two years. When he returned home from overseas he worked as a plumber for Campbell Plumbing & Heating in Floral Park, He and my mother were married June 25, 1920. They lived in an apartment here in New Hyde Park for a short time and then lived in a house built on Park Place, Floral Park, by Martin Evensen. I arrived into the world a year later and then my brother Jim 10 years after me! Dad and Uncle Dick started "Miller Brothers Plumbing & Heating" business in 1924. They began with one building on the grounds of the family homestead on Jericho Turnpike & Herkomer Street. Over the years the number of buildings gradually increased until they reached the five which stand today, still operating as "Miller Brothers Plumbing & Heating, Inc." After Dad's death in 1953, leadership of the business was taken over by my brother Jim and his two sons, Jim Jr. and John, who are the third generation of Millers.

Uncle Dick married Flora Canfield, a teacher at the New Hyde Park Road School. In 1938 they moved from New Hyde Park to Aunt Flora's home town of New Paltz, New York. There they raised their three children - Roger, Jill and Ann. From then on it was just Dad who owned and the business, which this year, 1994, celebrates its 70th year.

Aunt Anna married Daniel Stenson, who was employed by The Standard oil Co., of New York.

Uncle Edward worked in the Bank of New Hyde Park (now National Westminster Bank) and he married Estelle Safcik. They remained in New Hyde Park and had three children - Robert, Lois and James. Their eldest son, Robert, a U. S. Navy pilot in the 1960s, was killed while on a anti-sub patrol flight off the coast of Virginia. His remains, as well as those of his crew, were never recovered. Lois married Charles (Chuck) Daly; they have two sons, David and Danny and a daughter Debbie. Lois and Chuck reside in New Hyde Park, as well as both boys - part time. Debbie married Phillip Driver from Toronto, Canada where they now live with their two children.

James married Christine from Falls Church, Virginia, where they live with their three children, Matthew, Amy and Adrian. Jim Sr., married Virginia Varacchi, October 15, 1950. They bought their home in New Hyde Park, 44 years ago, where they still live today. They had five children - Janet, Joanne, Jim Jr., John, Jeanne.

Jim Miller, Jr. married Diane Leighton. They have three daughters Sarah, Meaghan and Kaitlynn and reside in Garden City South.

John married Danielle Thayer; they have two sons, John Jr. and Ryan James. They reside in New Hyde Park. As of now, Janet and Jeanne have not married.

Joanne Miller, married Joe Fischl. They have one daughter Lauren and live in New Hyde Park.

As for me, during WWII, I married Harry Walters of Baltimore, MD, who was a Sergeant in the U. S. Air Force, stationed at Mitchell Field. We were married May 6, 1945 at Our Lady of Victory Church in Floral Park. He liked New Hyde Park so well that we stayed right here! We bought our present home brand new forty-three years ago. We have three children - Robert, Maryanne and Kenneth, none of whom stayed in New Hyde Park after they married. They have given us five beautiful grandchildren to love.

Robert resides in Tempe, Arizona with his wife, the former Barbara Sawchuk, and their two girls, Christina and Cathy. Maryanne graduated from Malloy College with a B. S. degree in Nursing and resides in Massapequa Park with her husband Robert, and their two children Jennifer and Stephen.

Kenneth has one son Kenneth Jr. and lives in North Babylon. All of the original Miller Family were parishioners of Holy Spirit Church (originally Holy Ghost) which is celebrating its 100th anniversary during this year of 1993. My dad, Frank was the second baby to be baptized at Holy Spirit Church.

If only the first generation of Millers, our grandparents, and the second generation our parents, could see our Village as it is today! How they would marvel at the tremendous progress which has been made! Our leaders are constantly striving to maintain and improve New Hyde Park to keep it the wonderful place it is to live!

James Edward (Ed) Miller

Contributed by Lois Miller Daly

James Edward (Ed) Miller was the youngest of six children. He was born October 19, 1900 at the Frank X. Miller Homestead, then located on the property just across the driveway from the Miller Bros. shop at 1324 Jericho Turnpike.

He attended Holy Ghost School, graduated June 19, 1914, and Hempstead High School. At the age of 13 he worked during vacations and spare time on Jacob Herte's farm located way out in the country at Lakeville Road. He couldn't make up his mind whether to become a banker or a farmer, but when he was offered a job as office boy in 1916 with the Floral Park Bank, he took it. There he worked his way up through bookkeeper to head teller.

The Bank of New Hyde Park was founded by the late Philip J. Christ in 1924. The young Bank of New Hyde Park (located at Jericho Turnpike and Millers Lane) needed an assistant cashier and gave the job to Ed Miller.

When the bank opened its doors for business, Ed was on hand to greet the 1500 visitors, who deposited a total of $50,000 on opening day. The Bank of New Hyde Park flourished into a sound banking business. The head cashier, and a bank director, was William Kielman. The balance of the staff was comprised of Philip J. Christ, President, and Gertrude Franklin, Assistant Cashier.

The directors of the growing bank soon recognized Ed's work and ability by making him head cashier in 1934 and vice-president in 1937.

On February 12, 1936 Ed married Estelle Safcik in Holy Ghost Church. On February 6, 1938 son, Robert John, was born; Lois Anne on April 16, 1940; and James Edward (Jim) on February 9,1947.

In 1946 Ed was made a director of the bank, and in January 1953, he was honored with presidency of the institution to succeed Marcus G. Christ, who was at that time inducted as Judge of the Supreme Court of the State of New York.

Edward Miller,
President, Bank of New Hyde Park.

Philip J. Christ was the first president of the bank and served until his death in 1933. From 1933 to 1936 the bank's president was William A. Kielman. In 1936, Marcus G. Christ, son of the bank's founder, took over the duties of president.

In 1953 other staff members serving with the new president were Ernest Bencivenga, Vice-President and Cashier; Martin G. Rhodes, Vice-President; Fred J. Brugger, Jean L. Kohler, and Shirley Peideman, Assistant-Cashiers.

John C. Kiefer, William A. Kielman, Edward Miller, Martin G. Rhodes, and Charles H. Weckerle remained as directors of the bank and four new directors were appointed. The new directors were Joseph F. Bellamente, Philip J. Christ, Julius Ross, and Harold E. Weidner.

When the bank merged with Meadow Brook National Bank in 1955, Ed emerged as a Vice-President and manager, and continued in charge of the [illegible] Hyde Park Branch, in the same familiar building.

On October 23, 1965, Ed was given a testimonial dinner commemorating his 50 years in banking. The guest speaker was Hon. Marcus G. Christ, Justice of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of the State of New York, and Ed's dear friend since boyhood.

At year's end 1965, Ed took mandatory retirement from the banking institution, Meadow Brook National. However, retirement did not limit Ed's continuing contributions to life here in New Hyde Park. Still going strong, he continued on to become a 20-year member, as a trustee, of the Library Board of the Village of New Hyde Park (retired 1980), and enhanced his duties as coordinator of the local chapter of the Salvation Army. In his earlier years, Ed was a volunteer fire fighter with the New Hyde Park Fire Department, an active member of the American Red Cross, and during World War II served as an air-raid warden in New Hyde Park. Ed was a charter member of the New Hyde Park Lions Club.

17 - The Schneider - Simon Family

Some of the things I remember growing up in the Simon Family.

by Marie Simon Koasis
Hicksville, New York

John, Charles and George Simon were the sons of Mary and Jacob Simon who lived at 24 South 12th Street, New Hyde Park, Long Island. Jacob, their father was a barrel maker. The house is still there. The factory part which was in the back of the house is long gone. It is the house always well decorated at the Christmas season.

John, Charles and George were born at 122 South llth Street, New Hyde Park across from what is the New Hyde Park Post Office. The house is still there and being kept up very well.

The Simon brothers farmed a large part of New Hyde Park, Long Island south of the Long Island Railroad, between Covert Avenue and Tanners Pond Road in Garden City. Between New Hyde Park Road and what is now 14th Street on 5th Avenue, the Simon brothers built a large red barn, a Carriage House, a corn crib and a well.

In the Carriage House they kept the wagons needed for farm use also a beautiful surrey with the fringe on top. This belonged to Charles and was his pride and joy. The surrey was painted black with a very high shine. The four large wheels were orange. The upholstery inside was gray and so was the fringe around the top. The surrey also had curtains on each side to be put down in bad weather. The surrey looked very much like what the Quakers in Pennsylvania use today. Also held there were the horses, feed and farm equipment needed to run the farm. The well was dug and built by the Gully Brothers who were the water supply of that period.

When the winter months set in, the boys built the farm house in the same location nearest the well. It still stands there today on the 5th Avenue side. Ann and Charles Simon's niece is still living in the farm house.

George Simon and his family rented a house on 4th Avenue until the boys gave up farming. At this time, George then designed and built his home at 815 5th Avenue, New Hyde Park. This home is still a lovely dwelling. His youngest daughter is still living in the home.

After sometime, John, who had married a lady from the east end of Long Island decided to farm out east. He and his bride found land in Peconic and set up their home there. After years of farming John was known as the Cauliflower King of Long Island. He raised cauliflower seed and sold it throughout the Northeast.

Charles and George remained in the New Hyde Park area where they planted mostly potatoes, corn and beans.

At one time during World War I, the soldiers from Mitchell Field while on maneuvers, came down Stewart Avenue, crossed over New Hyde Park Road and into a large part of the potato field that was just about ready to harvest. This was quite a blow to the Simon's hard work.

Mr. Denton, who was a lawyer of the area, was engaged to settle this problem with the government. I remember well when the check came for $25.00. That was my fathers share of the destroyed potato crop.

Note: Mr. Denton's beautiful home on Jericho Turnpike has been restored and is now McDonald's, the popular hamburger restaurant.

Charles and George farmed the area for many years. Charles became ill and had to give up the hard work of farming.

George returned to his carpentry trade and worked for many years building houses in the local area. While repairing a store on Jericho Turnpike a large metal sign fell on his head and he could no longer work at that trade. After he recovered, he became grounds keeper at Sewanhaka High School where he remained until he retired.

John and Annie Schneider both were born in 1840 and married in Germany and immigrated to the United States. He in 1884 and she in 1885 with three children; John, Andrew and Margaret. The other two, Katherine and Margaretta came a year later. A census taker here in the US in 1900 lists John Schneider as a Carpet Weaver. They settled first in New York City, on the East Side moved later to Elmont, and then to New Hyde Park. They had a house built on what is now South 8th Street and a shop was built next to the house where the loom was set up and the carpets were woven. The house and shop still stand and both are occupied, the shop having been converted into ranch type of house. Margaret moved there with her family when she was 13 years of age and stayed there until she married George Simon in the year 1900. They were married in the living room by a Protestant Minister which was a cause for some concern, since George Simon was Catholic. At that time marriage between the two religions was strictly forbidden, but they did it anyway.

The George Simon Family History

by Elda Simon

Margaret Schneider and George Simon were married in 1900 and lived in various houses in New Hyde Park, which they rented. George, John and Charles Simon farmed for many years on a large tract of land stretching between the two railroad tracks an north and south, and on the east as far as Tanners Pond Road and on the west a little beyond what is now Covert Avenue. They employed many local people as workers on the farm. The land was very productive and they lived very nicely for many years. Farming was not mechanized at that time and much work was done by hand. They had a good size stable of horses to pull the heavy equipment. Even the produce was brought into the market in New York City by horse and wagon. They had their own cows, pigs, chickens, grew all their own fruit and vegetables and were truly self sufficient family. They had their own well. In winter they would cut ice on the local ponds and bring it home, where it was stored in an ice house to be used in the sumner. Most of the land was sold off by the Kelsey family and all that remains of the farm complex is one house (The Lake House) on New Hyde Park Road and Fifth Avenue and a smaller house behind it. After leaving the farm, George Simon bought three lots from Mr. Charles Kelsey, who owned a great deal of the property. He subsequently bought two more lots next to the original three and built a house on the corner of what was then 1st Avenue and South 9th Street, but is now known as 5th Avenue and South 9th Street. All the children grew up there and did not leave home until they were married, as was the custom in those days. His son George was the first to be married to a Mildred Louise Hoffmann. This marriage produced one son, Donald. They built a house on North 12th Street where George still resides. Gertrude married next to a James A. Deegan, and they built a home next to George on North 12th Street. The marriage produced no children. In 1948, Elda married Stephen Loreng, a NYC policeman. Marie married Charles Koasis in 1950 who was a career officer in the Us Air Force. After George Simon Sr. died, Elda moved home to her mothers residence where she still resides with her husband. The marriage produced one son Phillip. Marie had no children. It is hard to believe that what was once rural farm country has grown into a thriving suburban community. New Hyde Park is situated about a mile past the city line and to the west stands New York City.

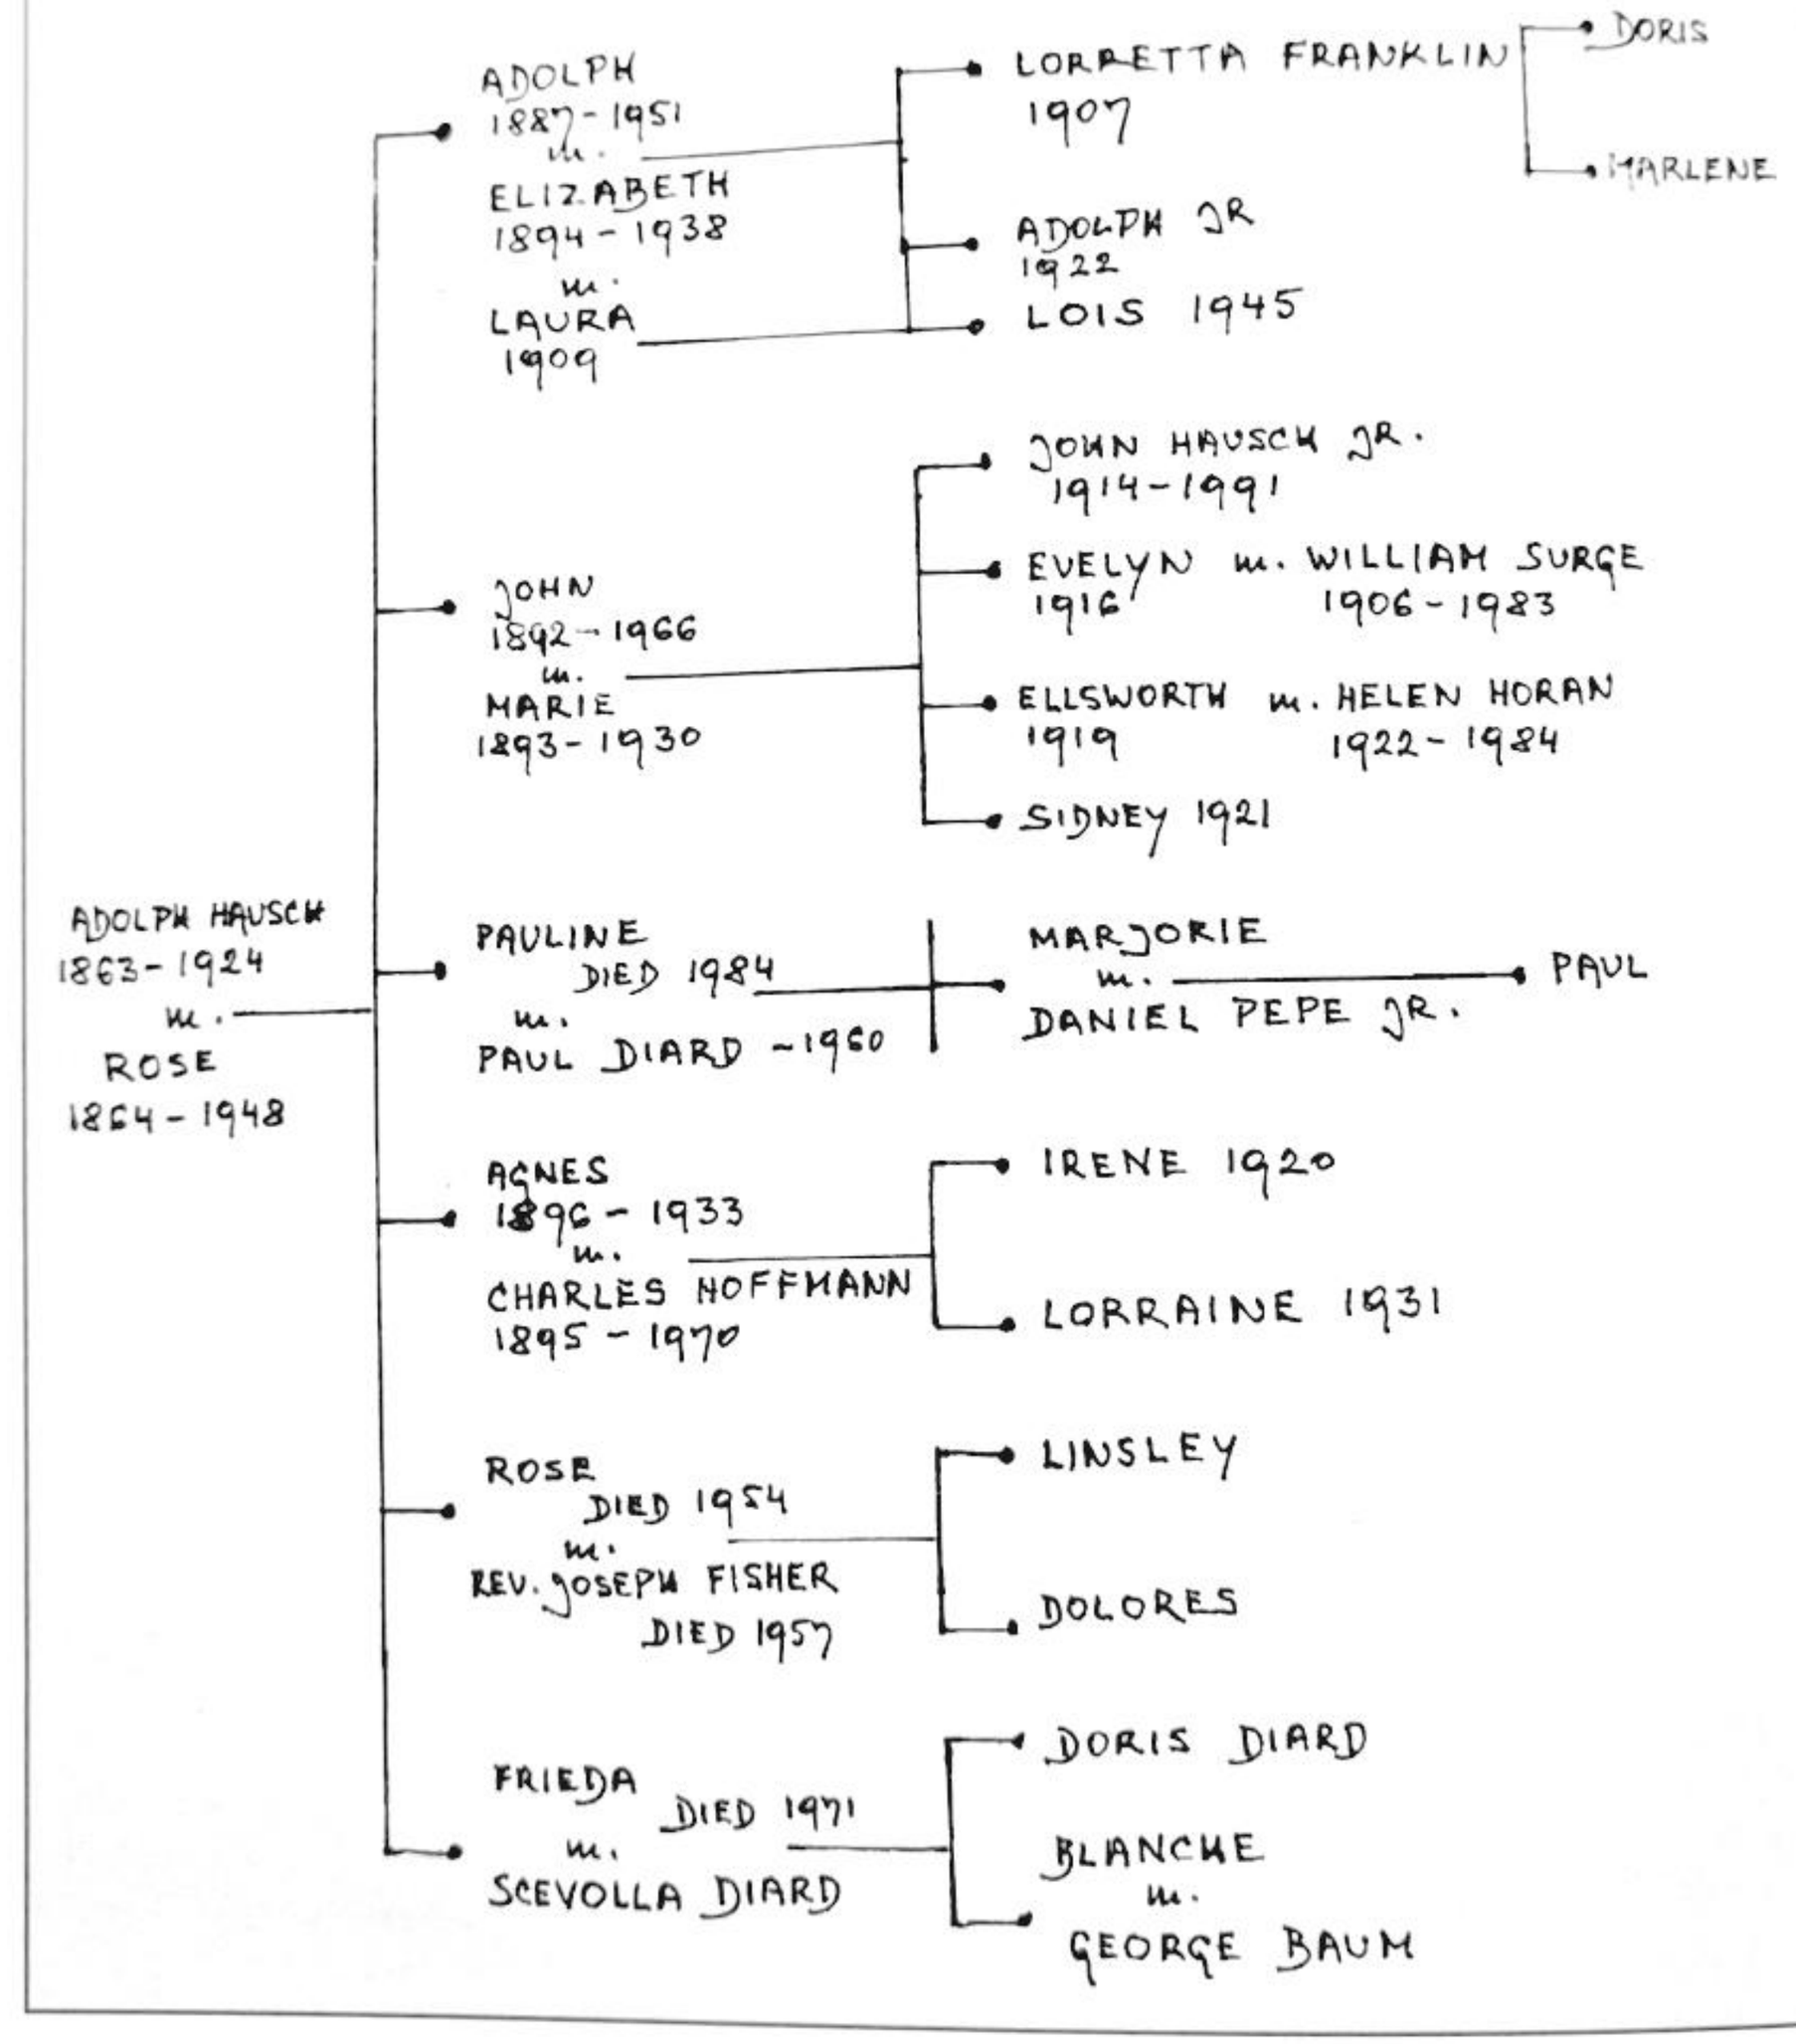
ADOLPH AND ROSE HAUSCH FAMILY TREE



18 - Adolph and William Hausch

Countless immigrants from all over the old world came to America to seek if not fame, at least fortune. Very few succeeded. Though the settlers in Hyde Park established themselves and became quite comfortable and though they accumulated some money, some more, some less, none of them could be called real rich. The exception was Adolph Hausch. If he had dreams about a golden land, his dreams came through. In the late 1880 he, his wife Rose, and his brother William with his wife Anne, arrived here from Germany. Adolph was a baker and quite a good one at that. He must have saved some money because he bought a house on the corner of South 11th St. and Jericho Turnpike and opened a bakery. As was customary at the time he lived right with the business and also as was customary, his wife helped in the bakery. In addition to all the housework she saw to it that the business ran smoothly and you can say she accomplished more than a hired hand. Adolph Hausch's breads, rolls and cakes were such outstanding quality, that his reputation reached far and wide

Adolph Hausch started his bakery business in the late 1800s. During the time of prosperity for his business, he employed as many as 16 driver salesmen. One of his horse and wagon routemen was J. Nicholas Krug, who in 1927 became the first mayor of the village of New Hyde Park.

1996 - Adolph Hausch Lock Shop, Bakery. 1100 Jericho Turnpike

and the demand for his baked good grew, that in time he had 16 horses and wagons to deliver his goodies. He had to build stables for the horses, additional ovens for the breads and eventually employed 30 persons. That fact was greatly appreciated by people who were temporarily down on their luck, as he was willing to give them work. One of his employees was J. Nicholas Krug the future Mayor of New Hyde Park. His drivers were delivering all over the area. They had to start very early in the morning and one time, one of his drivers had a little incident. You know how dangerous it is to fall asleep at the wheel. Well, in the era of the horse and buggy they had no such problem. When the driver Mr. Donoski dozed off on his route, his horse Daisy, brought not only herself, but him too safely home. That little nap didn't bring him into danger, only into embarrassment.

Adolph and his wife Rose had 6 children. All grew up and benefited from their fathers success. The bakery business was thriving and Adolph accumulated a fortune. He bought many parcels of land and deeded it to his children. As the bakery was a large operation, both his sons Adolph and John along with their wives were needed to continue their fathers business. Later the children too were helping, till in the 30's the establishment was sold. It still operated as a bakery for a few more years, but now it is no more.

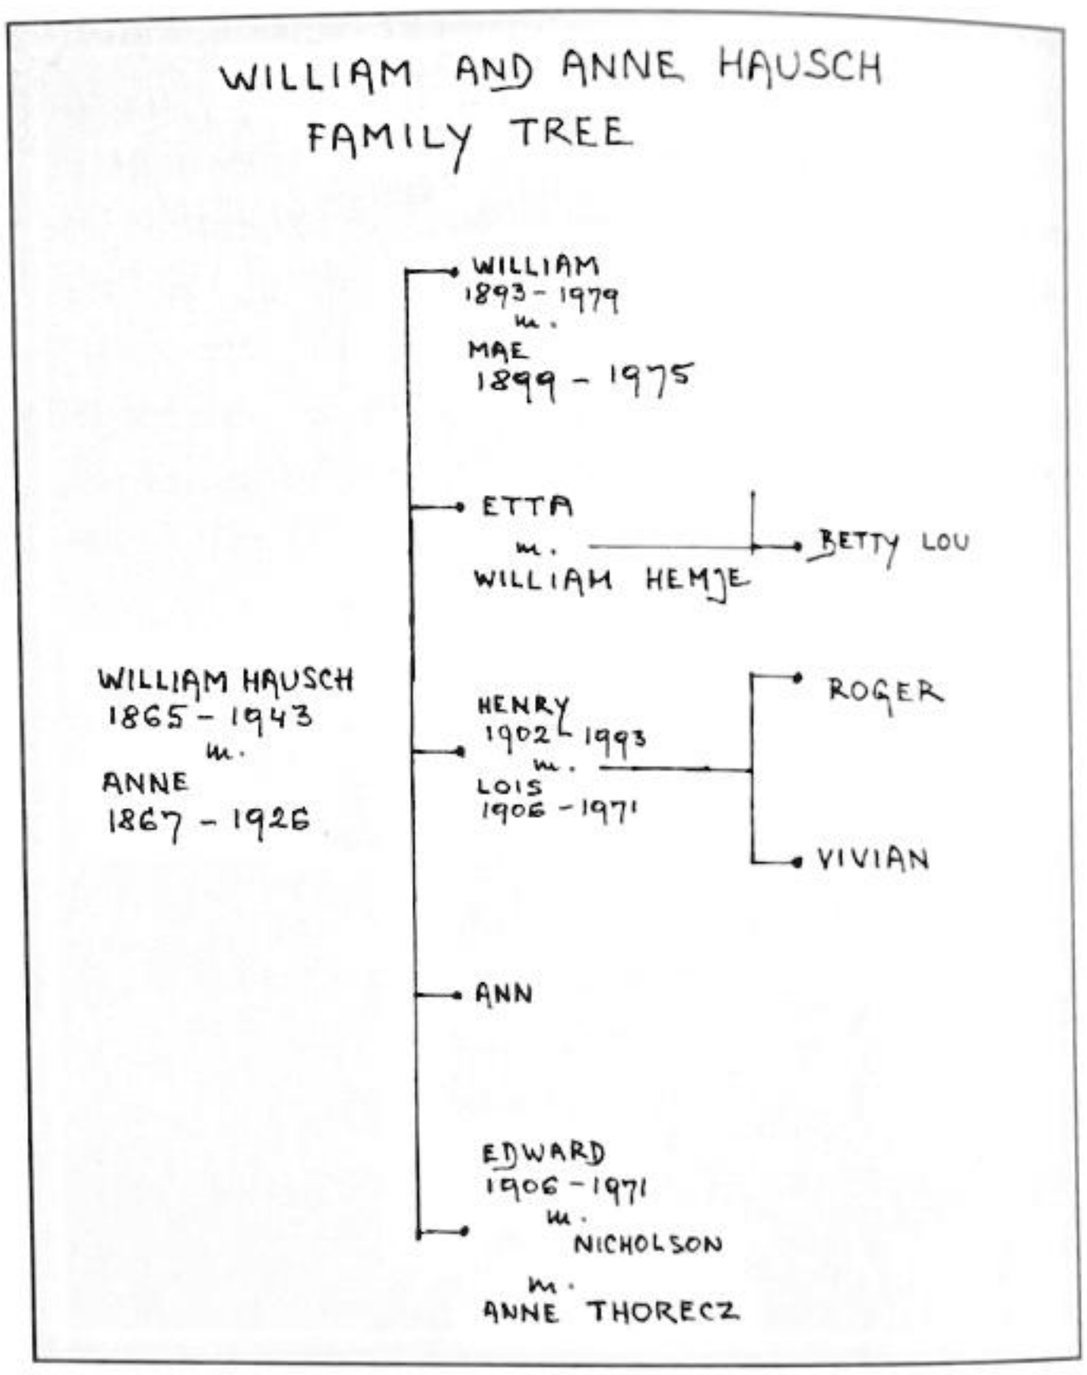
For the two Diard brothers Paul and Scevolla who married Adolph's daughters Pauline and Frieda. Adolph built a garage on the SE corner of Jericho Turnpike and New Hyde Park Road and a two family beside it. In addition to the garage the brothers had a show room at the same site where they operated a Chevrolet Auto Agency. Later the trucking company B.G. Antum moved in. Now it is the site of the Town Shell Gas Station.

The daughter of Frieda and Scevolla Diard, Blanche who married George Baum, still lives in a house on South 16th Street.

Of the original settler Adolph Hausch the following descendants still live in New Hyde Park.: Laura Hausch (daughter-in-law) with her daughter Lois on New Hyde Park Road, Ellsworth Hausch (grandson) on South 11th Street and 1st Avenue, Lorraine Hoffman (granddaughter) on Herkomer Street.

Among Adolph Hausch's other achievements: organizer of the Presbyterian Church, President of the New Hyde Park Board of Education, Mutual Aid Society, Board of Trade, The Flag Association, and the Shield of Honor.

William (1865-1943) and Anne (1867-1926) Hausch



William Hausch's brother Adolph, with whom he came to this country, was a baker. We don't know what trade William was trained in. When he came to New Hyde Park he, like his brother, went into business for himself. Although there were already several inns in the Village, he thought there would be enough trade for yet another one. He built a house with rooms for rent, a kitchen and dining room and naturally a bar on the SW corner of South 9th Street and Jericho Turnpike. His wife Anne was an excellent cook, specializing in German dishes and it was not too long that he attracted different German societies which met in his place. There was a great deal of singing going on and the place got to be known as: "Gemuetlich". The Germans always like their clubs and there was a Gesangversein and a Turnverein, a football club and a Wandervogel. Things were going well. Very well indeed! Especially when the Vanderbilt Car races were held. People from all over came to see the race and all the Hotels in New Hyde Park were filled to capacity. Some people even lodged in private homes, where residents were willing "to let" a room. Having so many visitors at one time, not only the hotels but also the other businesses in the Village benefitted.

William and Anne prospered till in 1919 Congress passed the 18th amendment which was death of all the inns. William was almost 60 when he started a new venture. Instead of an inn, he now operated an ice cream parlor. But there was no more "GEMUETLICH" and the store did poorly. He sold his whole property to Sam Gelman who built a stationery store along side the Altman Dry Goods Store and to this day it is a stationery store.

During the depression Sam Gelman lost the property (It reverted back to the Hausches) but he was able to hold onto his other property on the SE corner of South 9th Street and Jericho Turnpike. This was the Gelman Liquor store which still stands.

Like everyone else in the community, William Hausch was active. He was an organizer of the building committee to erect the First Presbyterian Church and his wife was president of the Ladies Aid Society.

Note: "GLEMUETLICH" means a pleasant relaxed atmosphere.

William J. (1893-1979) and Mae (1899-1975) Hausch

William Hausch Jr. was born in New Hyde Park and remained in the Village throughout life. Like his father, he was active in his church and when David Holman organized the Republican Club in New Hyde Park he became the first President. In Nassau County he held a position in the assessors office and also worked in the sheriffs office.

Henry (1902-1993) and Lois (1906-1971) Hausch

Henry Hausch had the personality of his mother and the drive of his father. He knew, that to succeed in life, you can't watch the clock and one has to go after business when and where it is to be found. Like his mother he was very pleasant and known as: "The friendliest guy". And like his father he didn't shun long hours of work. But unlike his parents he did not go into the "Hotel Business". He started an Insurance Company in 1925 with his partner Abe Farber at 1015 Jericho Turnpike. He did not sit at the office and wait for clients, but went to visit people. He was congenial and always willing to give advise when needed. That surely paid off. More and more people has their insurance handled by him and the business grew. In time he dissolved the partnership and moved the office in 1950 to 820 Jericho Turnpike. That used to be the location of "HAUSCH HOTEL". At that time the population of the Village greatly increased and so did his business. More and more desks had to be put into the office and more people employed to do all the paper work.

Henry prospered and he and his wife Lois have 2 children Roger and Vivian, both attorneys. Needless to say a man like Henry was very active in community affairs. When the Village was organized, he served as the First Village Clerk. He also was a Village Assessor, Secretary of the New Hyde park Fire Department, a member of the Board of Trade and a lifelong member of his church and political club.

Henry Hausch, New Hyde Park Founder

Henry J. Hausch, 91, of Garden City, a founder of the Village of New Hyde Park, died Monday at Winthrop-University Hospital, Mineola.

Mr. Hausch was president of Hausch Real Estate & Insurance, New Hyde Park, for 45 years beginning in 1925 and thereafter maintained a very busy consulting schedule until last year.

He was active in New Hyde Park's incorporation as a self-governing village in 1927 and he volunteered to be the first village clerk, serving at no salary for almost a year until the first tax-roll income could be obtained to hire someone else.

In addition, he served as village assessor for many years and for a decade on the Nassau County Board of Assessors.

Mr. Hausch also had been active in New Hyde Park Fire Department and in the Sewanhaka School District. He handled the property acquisition for the land on which Sewanhaka High School was built.

He was a 50-year member of the Floral Park Masonic Lodge and of the New Hyde Park Elks.

Mr. Hausch moved to Garden City about 20 years ago.

He is survived by a daughter, Vivian Hausch of Mount Vernon, N.Y.; a son, Roger, of Garden City, and two sisters, Ann Hausch of Westbury and Etta Hausch of Washingtonville, N.Y. His wife, Lois, died in 1971.

A service was scheduled for 10 a.m. today at the Fairchild Sons Funeral Home, Garden City, with burial in Greenfield Cemetery, Hempstead.

19 - The Kiesling Family

Contributors to the story: Walter Kiesling in Florida and Mable Grunert of New Hyde Park

In 1888 yet another German family moved to New Hyde Park. They were the Kieslings. Joseph Kiesling was a shoemaker who learned the trade in Germany. When he came to this country he first settled in Brooklyn where he met Emily Thalen, another German whom he married, Shortly after his 4th and last child Walter Carl was born in 1885, he had the opportunity to acquire a shoe shop in Hicksville and moved himself and his family to the Island. From start to finish his shoes were all handmade, which today is a lost art. So it is surprising, that he turned his back on his craft and started to work at an Inn in Hicksville. Maybe there was not enough demand for his shoes or probably he thought he could make more money in another field. At any rate, when in 1888 the Nassau Inn in New Hyde Park was up for sale, he bought it and started to operate it. In addition to the lodgings for the merchants and farmers, he also had stables and grooms for their horses and once again a wife had to chip in. Emily did the housework and all the cooking and at times there were a great many mouths to feed, especially early in the 20th century when the Vanderbilt Cup Races were held. They certainly were good for business in New Hyde Park. And, especially being a proprietor of an inn, one could make money. Joseph and Emily prospered, but in 1908 Joseph died and Emily followed him to the grave a year later.

Teddy Roosevelt's photograph graced the bar at the old Nassau Inn when this shot was taken.

Meanwhile, son Frank was running the inn, until 1917 when it was sold to a Mr. Epp. By that time roads were improved, the automobile was in use and fewer farmers had the need for the stables. And, there was another reason: the Temperance Movement was on the march and in 1919 they succeeded. The sale of liquor was prohibited.

Joseph was an activist. There was an organization in the village with over 200 members, which was a mutual aid society. Everybody was assessed $1.00 for a death benefit for anyone of its members. Joseph Kiesling was the treasurer and his son Frank the secretary. Joseph was on the school building committee and had seen the completion of the school on the corner of Jericho Turnpike and New Hyde Park Road. And, once again, his son Frank served with him and was the clerk at the first Board of Education.

Frank Kiesling

Frank was working with his father, not only at the business, but also in the community. He managed the inn very well, but it was hard work and his interests lay elsewhere. People just started to use electricity and somehow he became an electrical wizard. He tried to get all the information he could and educated himself. He was also fascinated by trains. So, he turned the management of the inn over to his brother Walter and sister Ethel and took a job with the Long Island Rail Road. Before long he had several mechanical improvements and some inventions amongst them, an important one which are the SEMI-FORES for the railroad and are still in use today. But, it brought him neither fame, nor money. Therefore, we want to recognize him today: "A humble man, but with great talent." Frank was Married to Augusta Reckenbeil and they had 6 children.

Walter Kiesling

When in 1917 the Nassau Inn was sold by the Kiesling family, Walter (1885-1966), who was the manager, had to look for another job. Where he learned how to paint, we do not know, but that's what he became; a painter. In 1904 he married Elsie Graff and they had two children. In the community he was a Charter Member of the New Hyde Park Fire Department and served as a volunteer and Commissioner for 55 years.

His daughter Emily married into the Baer family and has two children. She worked for her uncle J. Nicholas Krug in the insurance agency. His son Walter remained in New Hyde Park until he recently retired to Florida.

Frank Kiesling Family

by Mable N. Grunert (nee Kiesling), reminiscing about living in New Hyde Park years ago

When we were very young, so many of us were related in New Hyde Park. There were Aunts, Uncles and Cousins all over.

The Simon family married with Reckenbeil. Reckenbeil with Kiesling, Klien, Hendrickson and Zier. Simon with Schneider and Hoffman.

I was born in New Hyde Park, as well as my four sisters and two brothers. My maternal Grandmother was Annie Dora Simon. She married George Robert Reckenbeil. My Mother Augusta Anna was born August 4, 1884, the third of eleven children. My paternal Grandmother was Emily Thalen. She married Frank Joseph Kiesling. My Father Frank J. Kiesling was born April 10, 1880. The first of four children.

Great Grandpa Simon was a Cooper; he made large wooden barrels. Grandpa Reckenbeil was a tinsmith. Grandpa Kiesling owned the Kiesling Hotel (later known as Nassau Inn). It was located on Jericho Turnpike, across from the New Hyde Park Bank (now is the Nation West Bank).

My father worked for his father at the Hotel when he was young. After that he worked for the Long Island Railroad. He was always inventing things. We had the first home made radio in New Hyde Park. He also was very musical. He played the piano by ear, and all other instruments except the saxophone. My mother was the matron at Sewanhaka High School from 1929, when it opened until she passes away in July, 1951.

Growing up in New Hyde Park was very different from today. There were very few houses and buildings. We had lots of fields to play in, filled with wild flowers. In June the fields on Jericho Turnpike, between New Hyde Park Road and Ingraham Lane was filled with daisies. We would take buckets and filled them with daisies to decorate the First Reformed Church for Children's Day. On New Hyde Park Road, (the area that is now the Oaks) was just all trees. We called it the woods. In the spring, the teachers from the Road School would take us for a walk to the woods. We would carry a bag lunch and have a picnic there.

There were no TVs and no movie houses. The nearest movie house was in Floral Park. We paid five cents to see a matinee. We amused ourselves with games. We played hide-and-seek, tag, hop-scotch, and jump rope outside, when the weather was nice. When we stayed indoors, we played games such as checkers, tick-tack-toe, hangman and pin the tail on the donkey.

In the summer we waited patiently for the Carnival to come to town. The Firemen's Parade was a big event. The Sunday School picnics to the beach was another big event, and the excursions on the Long Island Railroad to Blue Point for the day, was also enjoyed by many.

I'm still living in New Hyde Park, one block from the street where I was born. My six children grew up in New Hyde Park, going to the same schools I went to, New Hyde Park Road School and Sewanhaka High School. John, Vincent and Richard live in New Hyde Park. Barbara lives in Huntington, Ronald in Amityville and Lynn in Greenlawn. I have sixteen grandchildren and six great-grandchildren.

My husband John also grew up in New Hyde Park. His father Vincent Grunert worked for a time for the Long Island Railroad. After that he worked for Hausch's Bakery, located on Jericho Turnpike and South Eleventh Street, delivering bakery goods by horse and carriage. We used to buy buns and jelly doughnuts, three for five cents, they were so delicious. John was in the Navy during World War II. He passed away from a heart attack at the age 43 on December 29, 1959.

My children gave me a surprise 75th birthday party in December 1993. I keep telling them I'm going to live to be one hundred. God willing, I will.

Agatha A. Claus, 101, Spirited Volunteer

For more than half a century, Agatha A. Claus, who died last Thursday at age 101, was deeply involved in New Hyde Park community affairs.

"She was very active in town, she couldn't do enough for people," said a son, Charles Claus, of Uniondale. "I can remember as a boy in grade school, she was treasurer of the Union Free School District No. 5" in New Hyde Park.

Mrs. Claus was a charter member of the New Hyde Park Fire Department Ladies Auxiliary, serving as its president in 1941 and 1942. She still belonged to the organization at the time of her death.

She also had been president, in the late 1940s, of the G&E Linder VFW Post Ladies' Auxiliary. That post was founded in 1946, Charles Claus said, when four of Mrs. Claus' sons returned from the war.

She was the eldest of 12 children, born on the family farm on Dry Harbor Road in Middle Village, Queens.

In 1915, she married Joseph Claus, a shipping clerk. He passed away in 1972.

Mrs. Claus raised nine children, seven of whom survive her.

Charles Claus said after the children grew up, his mother took a job as a cook for pastors at the Holy Ghost Roman Catholic Church, now Holy Spirit, in New Hyde Park.

She worked there for a number of years and then went to work for at St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church in Garden City.

"She worked until she couldn't work anymore, and she drove her own car until she was 82," Charles Claus said. "I had a job getting her to stop."

In addition to Charles, Mrs. Claus is survived by two daughters, Agatha Rivett of Orange, N.J., and Theresa Williams of Rancho Cordova, Calif; and four sons, Joseph of Anaheim, Calif., Andrew of Old Bethpage, Thomas of Lake Poway, Calif., and Raymond of Fairfax, Va., three brothers, Harry Kollmer of Mohawk, N.Y., George Kollmer of Stratford, N.Y., Bill Kollmer of Ocala, Fla., and two sisters, Anna Sartor of Dearborn Heights, Mich., and Margie Sartor of the Valley Forge, Pa., area. She is also survived by 31 grandchildren, 45 great-grandchildren and a great-great-granddaughter.

A funeral mass was held Monday at Holy Spirit. Interment was in Pinelawn Memorial Park, Pinelawn.

In the end, Leonard G. Filasky Sr. was simply a man who liked to grow things.

Mr. Filasky, 76 , died Wednesday after a heart attack at his home in Laurel on Long Island's North Fork. And while he may have stopped selling produce from a landmark fruit and vegetable stand in Nesconset, even in retirement he still grew greenhouse tomatoes near his new home, stubbornly selling them to East End roadside stands under the Filasky farm label.

"He always thought of himself as a farmer," said son Leonard Jr., who for many years had to do some of his family's heaviest lifting when his father farmed more than 35 acres of leased land in St. James and Riverhead, specializing in tomatoes and corn.

Mr. Filasky was born on his father's potato farm in New Hyde Park on Sept. 11, 1919. A graduate of Chaminade High School in 1938, he earned a bachelor's of science degree from St. John's University in 1942.

During World War II, he rose from the rank of private to captain serving with the U.S. Army's Medical Corps, and it was at Camp McCain in Mississippi that he met and eventually married an Army nurse, Rose Marie Dolcini. The couple celebrated their 52d wedding anniversary last March.

After the war, Mr. Filasky returned to Long Island to work at first with his father and later with a brother-in-law.

In the mid-1950s he moved his family to a house along what was then a new bypass around Smithtown, Route 347. According to his son, Mr. Filasky was working as a sales manager for Canada Dry, but slowly began taking advantage of their home's location along a highway, at first selling tomatoes under an awning. Eventually he built several greenhouses and a permanent farmstand. An apple cider press was added in 1972 while an antique wagon touting the family's agricultural history on Long Island dating to 1901 was parked out front.

And although his farmstand was eventually surrounded by suburban development, including a Cadillac dealer next door, Mr. Filasky, an unpretentious man, once conceded in an interview that farming was a gambler's game: "I'm a gambler at heart in this business. It seems as if everything is against you. If it isn't the weather, it's the machinery, and if it's not the machinery, it's the help . . ."

About five years ago, the familiar Filasky name disappeared from the Smithtown bypass when he decided to sell the property.

Surviving in addition to his wife and son is another son, John, of Port Jefferson; two daughters, Carol Ann Arndt of Mamaroneck and Mary Alice Lehn of Mattituck; two sisters, Dorothy Clifford, of Bayville and Lillian Goodmanson, of Cold Spring Harbor; four grandchildren, two step-grandcildren, and a step great-grandchild.

Mr. Filasky was buried yesterday in Sacred Heart Cemetery, near snow-covered potato fields not very much different from the world in which he grew up and spent a lifetime cultivating.

Hot Fight In New Hyde Park For Police Magistrate

David Holman Opposing Marcus Christ in Contest That Puts Balance of Ticket in the Shade

There is a red-hot fight going on in New Hyde Park over the position of Police Magistrate, and it promises to eclipse anything and everything in that village until election day, Tuesday, March 20th.

Marcus J. Christ

Although there are two positions to be filled on the Board of Trustees this year, and although both the Citizens' Party and the Public Affairs Association have complete tickets in the field, the fight has simmered down to who will be police magistrate of that village for the next four years, beginning January 1st, 1929.

Marcus Christ, the standard--bearer of the Citizens' Party, is a well-known young lawyer of that community, is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, and an LL.B. of Harvard Law School. Starting in the practise of law a few years ago, Mr. Christ has made great strides in his profession. Marcus Christ was born in New Hyde Park, and of course has a host of friends who are out working for him.

Equally well known in New Hyde Park is David Holman, also a young and promising lawyer, and the standard bearer of the Public Affairs Association. "Davy," as he is known to his many friends, was also born in New Hyde Park, and has a large following there.

Holman claims that the recent caucus of the Citizens' Party was a steamroller affair, and in answer to this Abe Farber, secretary of the Citizens Party, has given us the following statement:

"An article appeared in some of the newspapers last week, headed "Holman Yields," and contains certain statements and insinuations which I believe should be refuted. Mr. Holman is quoted as saying that when he ran in the caucus of the Citizens Party for the nomination for Police Justice of the Village of New Hyde Park, that he did not get a fail deal, and because of that he was justified in breaking his pledge to support the choice of the caucus, Marcus G. Christ.

"It is significant that this caucus was called partly at Mr. Holman's request, that the men who attended it comprised practically all of the men who actively supported the Citigens ticket at the last Village election, and that before the caucus convened Mr. Holman was shown a full list of all the names of men who were invited to attend the caucus and was asked if there were any names he wanted to add, and all the persons whom he asked to have invited were invited and appeared at the caucus.

Caucus Work Defended by Its Secretary

A. Robert Farber Says Holman Got Square Deal At Meeting

The following letter was received by the New Hyde Park Leader, in defense of the caucus which placed Marcus G. Christ in nomination for police justice of the village:

Dear Editor:

An article appearing in the Brooklyn Daily Times on Monday, March 5, 1928, headed "Holman Cields," contains certain statements and insinuations which I believe should be refuted. Mr. Holman is quoted as saying that when he ran in the caucus of the Citizens' Party for the nomination of Police Justice of the Village of New Hyde Park, that he did not get a fair deal, and because of that he was justified in breaking his pledge to support the choice of the caucus, Marcus G. Christ.

It is significant that this caucus was called partly at Mr. Holman's instigation. That the men who attended it comprised practically all of the men who actively supported the Citizens' ticket at the last village election, and that before the caucus convened Mr. Holman was shown a full list of all the names of men who were invited to attend the caucus and was asked if there were any names he wanted to add, and all the persons whom he asked to have invited were invited and appeared at the caucus. That when the caucus assembled Mr. Holman knew when he was in the meeting who was present and both he and Mr. Christ were asked to pledge themselves to support the nominees of the caucus, which they did. Mr. Christ was nominated by a vote of 26 to 5 and Mr. Holman again reiterated his promise to support the ticket of the Citizens' Party. If Mr. Holman believes that all of the men who voted in favor of Christ and against were out to trick him, one of their own members, his indictment is very large, and a slander on some of the most representative citizens of this community.

After Mr. Holman has broken his pledge to the 31 citizens of New Hyde Park that he would abide by their decision, and after he has deserted the Citizens' Party, of which he was an active member, it does not seem to the writer that statements from Mr. Holman such as have appeared in the Brooklyn Daily Times come from him at this time with good grace.

20 - The Post Office

In 1871, Hyde Park had no Post Office yet. The ten families, who lived in the hamlet at the time, had to travel by horse and wagon to Hinsdale (Floral Park) to pick up their mail, which was not only a nuisance, but also time consuming as well. So to get a Post Office, they at first generated a lot of mail activity by having all their friends and relatives write to them. Then they petitioned the postal service, whose agent agreed on the need to have an office at Hyde Park. But the name had to be changed, there already was a Hyde Park Post Office in the state of New York, which was the village on the Hudson River. New was added to the name, and that's how the village became New Hyde Park. The custom at the time was to have the Post Office located at a store. The Postmaster was not yet a full time job, and the store owner was always there to take care of customers–not only the letters, stamps and parcel business, but his own as well. People came to pick up their mail and at the same time would buy something at the store.

John Christ was appointed the first postmaster. The office was located at his own grocery store and inn, which by that time had become the Hyde Park Hotel. After John Christ's death in 1885, Philip Miller was appointed postmaster. He moved the office across the street to a back room of the Miller Building, which today is Henry's Inn at the corner of Jericho Turnpike and Millers Lane. Until 1920, a Christ-Miller relative always served as postmaster: Rosina Christ Miller, Anna Lemstiner and Philip J. Christ.

In the 1920's, Frank Rosenberg had a small stationary store at 1314 Jericho Turnpike. After his appointment, the post office was located at his place. He also hired his sister Minnie as a postal clerk. The population increased, and in 1929 Frank Rosenberg built a larger building on his own property. He was still the postmaster, but Niles Taft was appointed to run the post office. There were now several employees in addition to Minnie Rosenberg: Charles Weckerle an R.F.D. postman and Jack Brandel and Joe Watson as local letter carriers.

Charles Weckerle, R.F.D. Postman, civil engineer, Village Engineer, County planning chairman.

In 1932, when F. D. Roosevelt was elected President, Congress appointed Jack Flynn, a democrat, to be Postmaster. As the population increased, a larger building was needed. The post office was moved to 1003 Jericho Turnpike, and more clerks and carriers were hired. When Jack Flynn passed away in 1948, a new postmaster had to be appointed. The 15-member selection board, which were the Democratic Zone Leaders, was looking for a suitable person. They found it in Andrew Wulforst and, after his congressional appointment, a new era began.

Post Office Department,

APPOINTMENT OFFICE,

February 27th, 1871.

Sir:

Accompanying this you will receive a letter of appointment as Postmaster at ..... New Hoyas Park ..... The salary to which you will be entitled, and which you will be allowed to retain out of the proceeds of your office, has been fixed at the sum of $ 12 ..... per annum until it can be ascertained what the amount of business will be.

You will, therefore, at the end of each quarter, make and forward to the Third Assistant Postmaster General a statement, under oath, of the total value of postage stamps canceled during the quarter. Under the present regulations you are not required to keep a regular account of mails sent and received as heretofore, except only of unpaid mail matter; but informal memoranda, made day by day, of mails sent from your office prepaid by stamps, will enable you to make the required quarterly statement.

Your salary cannot exceed the amount to which the office would be entitled from commissions and box rents under the former law, but will be readjusted at the proper time by the Postmaster General, on the basis of the amount of business done as shown by the quarterly statements above required.

I am, respectfully, &c.,

J. W. Marshall

First Assistant Postmaster General.

Salary $57.00

Per annum

Who is Andrew Wulforst? He was not born in New Hyde Park, but his parents moved to the village when he was only 4 years old. He was educated at the local Catholic school. As a boy he already showed organizational abilities by forming groups of children to play. In World War II, he served his country in the European Theater. After returning home, he continued organizing. He was a charter member and commander of the V.F.W., and he expended great effort in organizing dances, picnics and outings, and was the leader of young Democrats.

When a democratic zone leader of the city visited his club, he could hardly believe what he saw. For years, democrats tried to make inroads in this staunch republican county without success. Now they found a young man who was able to have a big club going. Andrews secret was his personality. He genuinely loved people and was always willing to help them. If somebody needed a doctor or lawyer, Andrew would find one. If somebody needed some merchandise, Andrew would find a place where one could purchase it at a reduced price. If somebody needed a shoulder to cry on, Andrew not only provided the shoulder but cried too. No wonder that the selection committee chose Andrew. Later he had to be confirmed by congress. The post office moved again. It was now at 1609 Jericho Turnpike.

Andrew liked a good time, but he also was a hard worker. He didn't mix business and pleasure. He ran the post office by the book and demanded devotion to the job. He was strict, but fair. Therefore, he was greatly liked by the employees who affectionately called him Andy amongst themselves and over the years gave him several testimonial dinners.

Up until now, all the progress and improvements in the village were a team effort. Collectively, the citizens circulated petitions or raised money to get things done. Andrew did it by himself. He was the one who changed the post office. Although the population greatly increased after the war, we still had only a small post office. Residents on certain streets still had to go and pick up their mail, Andrew wanted to change all that. He went to Washington to see the Postmaster General and came back with the promise for an additional mail truck. To expand the area, he visited the business establishments and offered them postal services, including having their meters set in New Hyde Park. More and more customers started to use the New Hyde Park post office. Andrew took more and more trips to Washington. More trucks, more employees and more need for bigger quarters. Washington gave him the green light, and Andrew very successfully negotiated the purchase of the George Baer property at 1001 2nd Avenue. The new building on the site is still our main post office.

Eventually a second building was added at 1301 2nd Avenue, a post office on Hillside Avenue and a substation established in the shopping center at Lake Success. Andrew never lost his love of people, so to no one's surprise, he was elected president of the National Postmasters Association. He served as the New Hyde Park Postmaster for 23 years. When he was about to retire, he was offered the job as Postmaster of the Long Island City Postal Complex. Andrew did not want to leave the area and decided to pass up that promotion. But his service was so great and his leadership abilities greatly needed, that the law was changed. Andrew was permitted to live in New Hyde Park, but work in Long Island City. That post office was large, and he had 1,000 employees under his supervision. At that office, he served for an other 11 years. He is alive and well and lives with his wife Claire on South 14th Street.

In 1967, John McClean became the next Postmaster of New Hyde Park and after him, in 1970, Emerson Gilmore. By now the postal service has once more greatly changed. Postmasters are not political appointments, but come up through the ranks. Our present postmaster is Joseph Capone.

We are not a sleepy little town anymore, but a large community. Our post office too, even without Andrew, would be large. But due to the efforts of just one man, we have a post office with First Class rating and 11040 area code that reaches from the city line to Herricks Road and south from the Expressway to the Garden City-Stewart Manor line. Many people contributed to the expansion, improvement and well being of New Hyde Park, but Andrew was our most energetic citizen.

St. Hedwigs Church

by Stanley Krupa

Around the turn of the century there were many Polish families living in the New Hyde Park area. They were Catholics and worshipped at the Holy Ghost Church. The parishioners at the church were Germans and had a German priest. The Polish people wanted a priest who could take their confessions in their own language. At that time masses were held at the Philip Miller Hall at Millers Lane and Jericho Turnpike. The following delegation petitioned the most Rev. Bishop McDonnell for a church of their own: Michael Wendelowski, Joseph Filarski, John Filarski, Frank Makowski and Andrew Janosik. The Bishop agreed to their request and named the Rev. Adolph Swierezynski their priest, and permission was given to build a Catholic Church in Floral Park. Father Swierezynski was tireless in visiting all the Polish families to raise money for the building. He rode his bicycle not only in New Hyde Park, but to Floral Park, Garden City Park, Roslyn, Mineola, Hempstead and Elmont.

In 1906, the St. Hedwig Roman Catholic Church was dedicated and Father Swierezynski served as pastor until 1911. He was succeeded by Father Franzis L. Wilamowski and served for 42 years until 1953.

First Presbyterian Church

As early as the year 1890, thirteen years before any attempt was made to organize a Presbyterian Church in New Hyde Park, the Rev. John Schweitzer, pastor of St. Pauls Presbyterian Church of Elmont, conducted religious services in Miller's Hall (corner of Miller's Lane and Jericho Turnpike). Most of those who attended were members of the Elmont Church. When the Rev. R. J. Buttinghausen became pastor of the Elmont Church, he recognized the importance of establishing a mission in New Hyde Park. It was largely through his foresight that a chapel was built in 1902. Six lots of land were purchased from the Taft Estate on South 9th Street where the church presently stands. The property had been deeded to St. Pauls Presbyterian Church in Elmont. When the trustee of that church refused to sign a mortgage for $1,000.00, the people of the New Hyde Park Mission then incorporated as a separate body on August 6, 1903. This newly formed organization had 22 members. The foundation for the church was laid in December 1901. It was not until 1903 that plans were completed for the new enterprise. The pulpit was supplied by students from the Bloomfield Seminary for almost a year. In 1904, the Rev. William Mayer was installed as a permanent pastor in August of that year. All the services at that time were conducted in German. Rev. Mayer left the church in 1910. The church was served by a succession of pastors from that time as follows to the present day:

Rev. Eugene Berger	June 20, 1911 - 1913
Rev. Gottlieb Ruesch	Sept. 2, 1913 - Dec. 31, 1929
Rev. Daniel Nicholson	Sept. 22, 1930 - Dec. 1, 1935
Rev. Harrison Geist	Jan. 17, 1937 - Oct. 15, 1938
Rev. Garland Lacey	Apr. 17, 1940 - May 31, 1946
Rev. Kenneth Brown	Dec. 4, 1946 - Jan. 31, 1979
Rev. Domel Fritz	May 4, 1980 - Nov. 20, 1982
Rev. Kevin Bowers	Dec. 11, 1983 - Present

The Village of New Hyde Park grew considerably over the years, and the church needed to erect a Christian Education Building to provide more room for church services and Sunday School. This was accomplished in 1962. The church celebrated its 75th Anniversary in 1978. On August 5, 1981, the church suffered a devastating fire, practically demolishing the structure. Services were held in the Christian Education Building during the reconstruction period which was completed in 1982. The Church was rededicated on June 6, 1982. Since then we have seen many changes, not only in the Village but elsewhere in the nation as well. However, the Presbyterian Church still stands, hopefully, for many more years to come.

Only the Roman Catholic Church and the Reformed Church existed. Presbyterian services were conducted in Miller's Hall (now Henry's Inn). The Presbyterian Congregation purchased six lots of land on the South 9th Street and in December of 1901 a foundation was laid. The mortgage for the church was taken by Mr. Marx Gottsch, the father of Mrs. Philip G. Christ, and Mr. Adolph Hausch, the local baker of New Hyde Park.

As We Look Back . . .

HERMAN HOROWITZ

In the early 20's — New Hyde Park was truly farm country. Complete with a one track Toonerville Trolley that ran from Mineola to Jamaica and back — when it didn't go off the trolley track.

New Hyde Park had about 15 Jewish families and meetings and Sabbath services were held at the home of Aaron Holman, father of David Holman. They resided at the corner of South 3rd Street and Jericho Turnpike. High Holiday services were held at the Fire House on Millers Lane.

I am reminded of my Bar Mitzvah in the year 1926. It was held at our home in Garden City Park — and all those who attended — to make up the necessary Minyan — had to walk at least 3 miles each way. What a far cry from today.

It is only fitting that we mention the names of that first handful of families who worked so hard to get the Temple started: The Horowitz Family, The Hyman Family, The Sirlin Family, The Holman Family, The Rosenberg Family, The Friedman Family, The Farber Family, The Sheppard Family, The Rendell Family, The Perlman Family, The Seligson Family, The Bossert Family, The Cohen Family, The Altman Family, and The Plesser Family.

Our first building project was undertaken in the early 1930's at our present site. Later a building boom attracted hundreds of young Jewish couples who wanted to live and raise their children in one of the closest suburbs to the city.

We subsequently engaged the services of a full time Rabbi. It wasn't long before our congregation had its first very important discussion to be — or not to be — Orthodox or Conservative. With all the younger members rooting for it — we became a Conservative Temple — and the result of that decision included the appointment of our wonderful Rabbi — who has lead us so ably all these years.

Through the years our Congregation has had its ups and downs — financially and politically — but it has always come thru with "Flying Colors" — thanks to our Congregants and Rabbi Moseson.

It is now important for us to hold onto all the accomplishments of those who are no longer with us — and all the improvements made by the present membership. And under no circumstances are we to forget the ladies who are and have always been the power behind the men of the Temple.

To conclude — we should and must continue to pull together and give the Temple our whole hearted support. Our compensation will be the continuation of the Temple — for us — our children and their children.

And this is how it all began...

On June 11, 1925, a meeting of the Hebrew Center in New Hyde Park was called to order by temporary Chairman Max Rendel. A motion was made by Charles Witkin that nominations and elections of officers be held for a six month term of office.

The motion was carried and the following officers were elected:

Max Rendel — Chairman
Aaron Holman — Vice-Chairman
Harry Rosenberg — Secretary
Louis Levine — Treasurer
Charles Altman — First Trustee
Sam Nadler — Second Trustee

The next question was what to name this new organization. This question was tabled until the next meeting.

Brother Bossert and Brother Rosenberg were appointed as a committee to contact all Jewish residents of New Hyde Park and Garden City.

Brother Tigar was to do the same in Floral Park.

The next motion debated and passed was for all members to donate one dollar towards a treasury. Present were:

Max Horowitz	Martin Hipsham	Sam Sirlin
Charles Altman	Louis Levine	Nathan Hoffson
Morris Bossert	Sam Plesser	Charles Hyman
Hyman Cohen	Harry Rosenberg	Charles Witkin
Harry Cassmer	Max Rendel	Max Tigar
A. Korman	Abraham Silverberg	Sam Nadler
Aaron Holman	Paul Siden	Sam Levy

Treasurer's report:
$21.00 income
5.86 expenditures for letters and stamps
$15.14 balance in treasury

signed Max Rendel — Chairman
Harry Rosenberg — Secretary

At the next meeting, June 24, 1925, there were three new members:

Ralph Bossert Louis Kaplan Sam Seligson

And so it all began . . .

THE REFORMED CHURCH, HYDE PARK, LONG ISLAND

A Reunion at Hyde Park, L. I.

JUST outside the city limits at Hyde Park, L. I., there stands a little chapel, always known as the Hyde Park Sunday School. The history of this little church has been a peculiar one; and just what its influence has been only Eternity can reveal; but it is certain that here Jesus was born in the hearts of men and here men were strengthened in faith in such a way that they have become a power for the cause of Christ.

This little Sunday school was started about eighteen years ago with Mr. William Hendrickson as superintendent, through whose faithfulness and the co-operation of willing teachers it became one of the most flourishing Sunday schools in the county, and it became a well-known fact that God supplied Hyde Park abundantly and the chapel never knew what it was to have a debt. After ten years of Sunday school work a church was started and the people decided to have it the same denomination as the church of Queens, Dutch Reformed, as the people had helped us and sent us workers.

The first sermon preached in the chapel was on the following text: "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us." At its tenth anniversary the same text was used by the same preacher, and now eight years have gone by and the people believe in the same text, for the same God has helped us, and as the little church will appear in its new coat of paint, new chairs, new carpet, new Bibles there was needed just a reunion of workers to add new zeal and new spirit to the laborers.

The reunion took place June 16, 1901. The church was decorated with flowers; above the pulpit, on an arch, was this motto, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us, and the word Welcome just below.

Very few of the workers of eighteen years ago remain to carry on the work, but invitations were sent out to all those who were identified with the work at any time, and it was indeed a red letter day in Christian experience to meet and greet fellow workers who are all striving for the same cause. There were more than 150 present at the morning service, and the student pastor of the church, David C. Weidner, of New Brunswick, was more than pleased to announce that the Rev. W. Hendrickson, of Newtown, the first superintendent, would preach the sermon; he touched the hearts of the people at once by introducing him as a father to him in Christian work, and the father of the flock gathered to meet him.

The text chosen was 1 Peter, 2-7. "Unto you therefore, which believe, He is precious." Hearts were melted under the earnest words of the preacher, for all knew his whole life exemplified that Jesus was precious to him.

In the afternoon Sunday school was held, as usual, hymns were sung that were taken from the first hymn book used in the Sunday school. The day was made a decision day, the pastor spoke to the children how necessary it was that they should become Christians and decide while they were young. Cards having been distributed to the scholars by the teachers the week before were collected and seventy children desired to live Christian lives. During the past three months the children have been studying the Catechism and the pastor has been much encouraged with their progress.

The crowning part of the day was the evening service; no program, no set rules, nothing but the spirit of God working in the hearts of the people to whom He has become precious. The first speaker was William Hendrickson, who told of the first years of hard work full of trials to be sure, but through prayer and faith they laid hold of the promises of God, who never failed; all things worked together for good. His testimony was that here he was trained for his noble work of the ministry; here he learned what it was to trust God and live by faith, with his Bible his greatest treasure. Rev. Hewlett Smith spoke how here he was benefited and made strong to go out into the world.

Joseph McCoun and Frank Baylis, of Floral Park, were the next speakers. They too testified how the work at Hyde Park prepared them for their work, and now both are superintendents in other Sunday schools.

While the thoughts of many go out with those old workers and each in turn tries to imagine the good old times, there are many hearts who cling lovingly around the present and there is one central figure on whom all eyes turn, ready to hear his message, for if Mr. Hendrickson, the first superintendent, was a father of the work, then Mr. E. L. Frost, the second superintendent, has been a mother in faithfulness and love, for it was he who took all to himself, watched and tended all until every man, woman and child bless him and wish him God speed in all things. Surely the hearts of all people were made glad, and when they sang "After the Likeness of Jesus" with so much feeling, the spirit of God must have entered hearts and prepared them to sing "Open the door for the children," that all might help to gather the golden grain and shout the harvest home.

After the song "Harvest Home," the benediction was pronounced by Rev. Mr. Hendrickson. This day will be one long remembered. May it lead to more reunions and prepare hearts for the grand reunion in heaven.

Early Schooling

In the last century, there were no schools in New Hyde Park. Therefore the parents had to send their children to neighboring villages for an education. Many times they had to be boarders and be with their families only on weekends. The following schools were attended by New Hyde Park students.

St. Boniface School Elmont: Benedict Hauck, Conrad Christ and J. Nicholas Krug.

Herricks Public School: The brothers Carl, William and Herman Baer.

New Hyde Park Public School on New Hyde Park Road: George and Mae Christ.

New Hyde Park School on Jericho Turnpike: Marcus Christ and David Holman.

Jamaica High School: Philip J. Christ and Eva Simon. Eva Simon taught in the New Hyde Park Public and Mineola schools.

Our Schools

by Florence Lisanti

When towns and villages are settled, the first priority is given to providing adequate shelter for the families. Next, churches are built and then the schools. In the beginning of our school system, the pioneers of the community gave freely of their time and energy to establish good schools.

The first school in this area was built around 1886. In 1894, it was enlarged and two more rooms were added to the front of the original building. Later on, the older part of this building was destroyed, but the newer portion still stands and was purchased and renovated by the New Hyde Park Baptist Church.

At a meeting on June 22, 1905, the voters approved the organization of Union Free School District No. 5. Nominations and elections were held for a 5-member Board of Education. Elected were: Philip J. Christ, Adolph Hausch, Charles Baer, John A. Hughes and Charles Haseman. Philip J. Miller was clerk.

The new Board of Education wisely began planning for the growing population, and in 1906 a new 8-room brick school building was erected on Jericho Turnpike and New Hyde Park Road. This building still stands and is now our Village Hall. When the building was finally dedicated in 1907, trustees Christ and Haseman had retired and had been replaced by Leonard Joerg and Albert Rohrer and so their names also appear on the Plaque in the hallway of the building.

1920 - Posting locations for school notices.

On April 22, 1924, at a special meeting of taxpayers, a Citizens Advisory Committee was appointed "to confer with the School Board and to formulate a plan to relieve the overcrowding of our present school and to provide school facilities for the future." The committee proposed that there be erected on the Garden City Park site (purchased in 1923) a temporary frame building having four classrooms. They further proposed that to temporarily relieve the crowding at the Jericho Turnpike School, a two room annex be attached to the present school buildings. This annex was later to be known as the Community Hall.

New Hyde Park PTA

by Florence Lisanti (1977)

A meeting to organize a Mother's Club was held at the school on Jericho Turnpike (now Village Hall) on Friday, March 16, 1923. Mrs. Philip Christ was elected President. A motion was made by Mrs. G. Christ to name the association, "Parent-Teachers Association." Motion carried. The minutes of this meeting written by C. J. Breuning also list the names of the charter members as follows:

Mr. G. Ruesch	Mr. H. Boeschen
Mrs. S. Diard	Mrs. W. Boure
Mrs. W. Hoffmann	Mrs. Barry
Mrs. C. Hoffmann	Mrs. A. Breuning
Mrs. P. Diard	Mrs. P. Christ
Mrs. W. Frerks	Mrs. J. Kloess
Mrs. G. Christ	Miss R. Clark
Mrs. Detleff	Miss R. Frontero
Mrs. Becker	Miss H. Buckley
Mrs. Macdonald	Mr. H. Cross
Mrs. Gottsch	Mr. A. Richardson
Mrs. J. Kiefer	Mrs. J. C. Wagner, Jr.

On September 7, 1927, the New Hyde Park Road School was opened. This year, 1977, the PTA program is fostering better communication among parents, teachers and administrators. The PTA has assisted in Back to School Nights, kindergarten registration, class trips and book fairs. Funds raised are used to purchase items to benefit all children. For example: pictures and frames for art appreciation, stand for dictionary, films and entertainment for the children's enjoyment, play equipment for each class to be used during lunch period. PTA actively supports legislation to insure the welfare of children and youth and is now embarking on a National program to decrease violence on TV.

The taxpayers voted to acquire a new school site in New Hyde Park. Six acres bounded by New Hyde Park Road, Belmont Avenue, Terrace Boulevard and Park Avenue were purchased. Late in 1925, at a special meeting, money was voted to erect a new school on the property purchased. This school was to have 20 classrooms, an auditorium to accommodate nine hundred and a spacious gymnasium. It was also voted that a new school with eight classrooms be erected at Garden City Park. Ground was broken for both buildings in January of 1926.

In 1928, New Hyde Park joined with Elmont, Franklin Square, and Floral Park in the establishment of Central High School District No. 2. In September 1930, Sewanhaka High School was opened. Following the close of World War II in 1945, the population of Nassau County increased significantly. Sewanhaka facilities were overcrowded. On June 12, 1954, one of the largest bond issues ever proposed for school construction in the State of New York was passed, and construction began for four junior-senior high schools (Elmont, Floral Park, Franklin Square, New Hyde Park), a junior high school on Hempstead Turnpike and an addition to Sewanhaka High School.

Our New Hyde Park-Garden City Park elementary school district now has four schools: Road School, Garden City Park, Hillside Grade and Manor Oaks-William R. Bowie. Only the Road School is in the Incorporated Village of New Hyde Park.

Reminiscences of New Hyde Park

by Marie Farina Brown

I was born in New Hyde Park and grew up on South 5th Street across from the Holy Spirit School. My family lived in New Hyde Park since 1914 and my father was a truck farmer. Our farm ran from Below: 1926 - Garden City Park School Under Construction.

3rd Street and Central Avenue

Lakeville Road to Cherry Lane and from Jericho Turnpike to Hillside Ave. We only rented, therefore when the property was sold during the 1920s, we moved the farm to North New Hyde Park. In 1922 my family moved to South 5th Street and I was born there in 1930. I had 3 sisters: Catherine, Theresa, and Betty and one brother Anthony. We all received a catholic education at Holy Spirit. The Dominican nuns had a convent there and ran an orphanage where Sister Cosca was in charge. Not all the children were orphaned, some of them came from broken homes or destitute families and found with the sisters security and an orderly life. Many of the children in the school came from quite distant surrounding areas and as they could not go home for lunch, the nuns provided them with a hot meal for 15 cents.

When I went to school, the building had four classrooms and a stage with folding walls that became an auditorium for graduation and other ceremonies. There was a very high enrollment by the time I entered school, therefore the stage was eliminated and the space used for two more single grade classrooms. My first and second grades I attended in the summerhouse of the convent. My teacher at that time was Sister Hortencia.

Looking back, first grade was very important to me, because there was a boy in school by the name of Frederick Brown and little did I know that 18 years later I would marry him. He also was born in New Hyde Park and the Browns were an old established family. The High School I attended was Sewanhaka. My brother Anthony became a lawyer and was for several years village attorney. My husband and I moved to South 18th Street and we have 6 children. Three of them still live in New Hyde Park.

Some School Incidents

Memories by George E. Christ

One of the strangest occurrences in New Hyde Park was the burning of a cross by the K.K.K. Yes there was a K.K.K. but their wrath was not directed against Blacks, there weren't any, or against Jews, they were an integrated part of the Community. The K.K.K. opposed the school board. For evening services at the First Reformed Church, they put on their robes and entered the church in formation, but removed the hoods when taking their places in the pews. I was still a child at that time and never before had I seen or heard of the K.K.K. and was so startled that to this day the event is vivid in my memory. To show their displeasure with the school board, at one time they burned a cross in the field in front of the school building. Seems some men didn't like the building of the new school and as they were out-voted at the meetings, they showed their protest in a dramatic way. This is the only activity of the K.K.K. I know about.

An event which had the children and especially their parents quite disturbed, occurred while the new school on New Hyde Park Road was being built. The foreman of the crew was Mr. Nelius, and he was the one who hired a night watchman to guard against vandalism. As it was cold and damp, salamanders (charcoal fueled stoves) were brought in to dry out the walls. Apparently the watch man wanted to warm up and stayed in one of the enclosed rooms. Maybe he fell asleep, because due to the fumes the next morning he was found dead. We children were taught the serious lesson about ventilation.

In my first High School year, I had to commute to Hempstead so I was looking forward to the building of Sewanhaka, as it would be closer to home. In 1929, we had an unusually strong storm and someone entered my fathers store and yelled, "the high school is being demolished by the wind." My father and I drove to Covert Avenue and the sight of the steel work collapsing is another event imprinted in my memory.

It is sad to note, that a major scandal involved members of the Sewanhaka school board and the principal. During the building of the school, there were some financial irregularities, some bribe taking, and after the investigation one person went to jail and the others, including the principal A.M. Croop, resigned in 1931. Also members of the school board were not reelected. Mr. C. Cooper was appointed acting principal, until in 1932 the job went to Dr. Alva T. Stanforth.

School Custodian

Frank Ripple and his wife came to New Hyde Park at the turn of the century, and in 1907 he applied and received the job as custodian in the new school of District 5 on Jericho Turnpike. With the job came living quarters which were located at the old school, now part of the Baptist Church on New Hyde Park Road. For the twenty years that Frank was the custodian of the school, the many children who attended, knew him as a gentle kind person and called him: "Pop Ripple."

Frank Ripple had 6 children, and one of his daughters Mrs. Marion Ripple Kessler supplied me with their names: Else Ripple Krause, Anne Ripple Wachter, Lillian Ripple Post, Frank Ripple, Jr., and Bessie Ripple Manning. On almost all the old photos of the Fire Department, one can find the face and name of Frank Ripple.

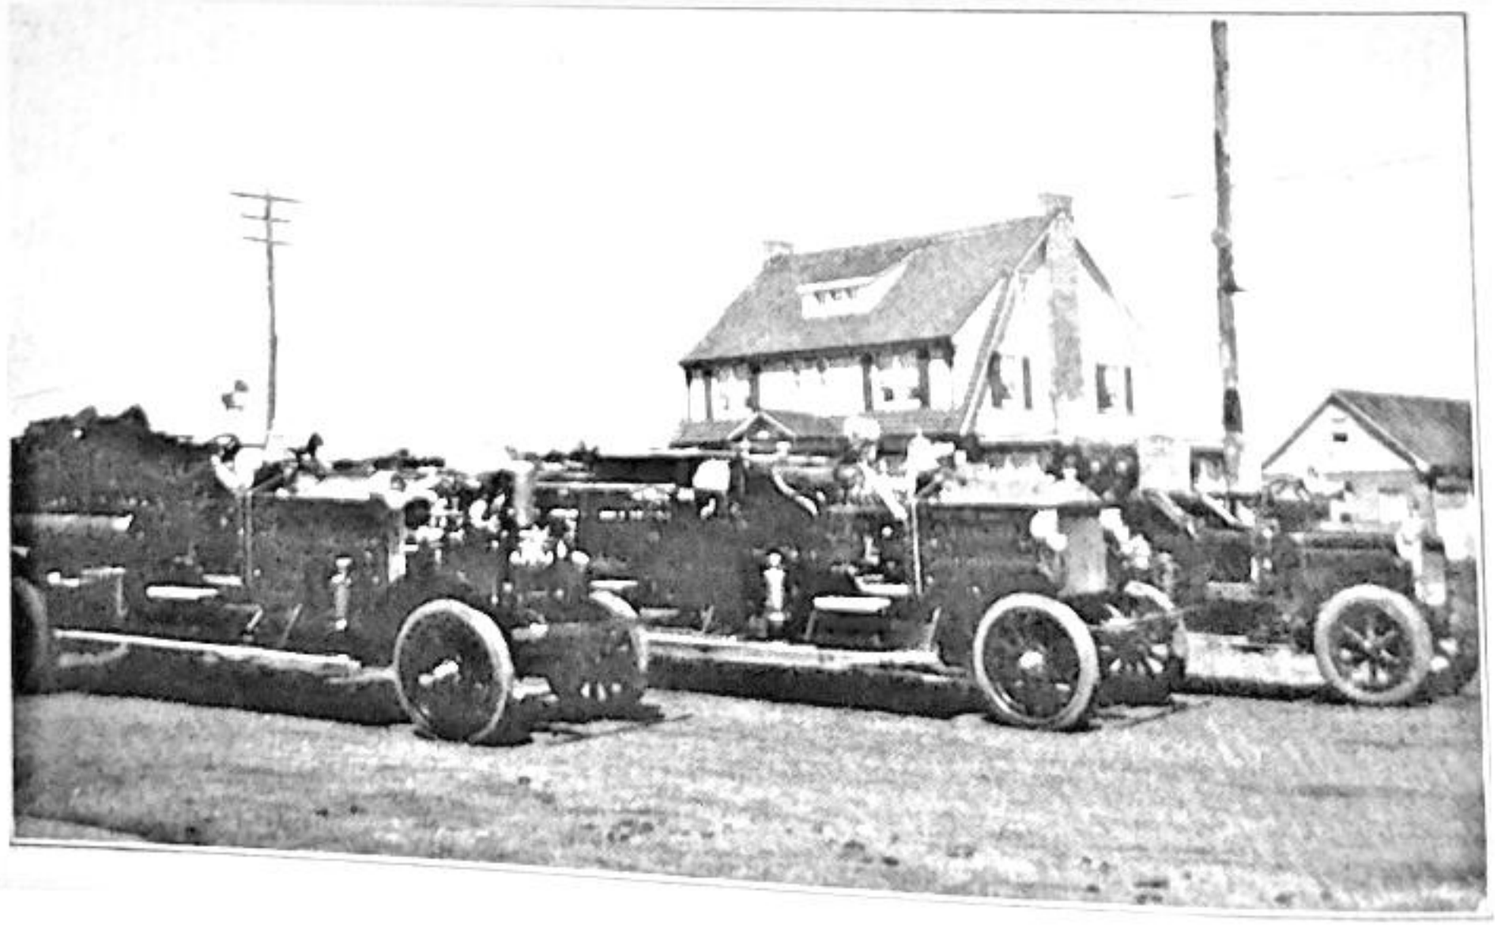
OUR FIRE DEPARTMENT APPARATUS
Pumper—Hook and Ladder—Hose Truck



New Hyde Park has one of the best fire departments on Long Island. It has three companies, consisting of 150 men. Its apparatus consists of an Ahrens-Fox Pumper, having a pumping capacity of 1,000 gallons per minute; Alrens-Fox Hook and Ladder; and a Selden Hose Truck.

In the last century, Hyde Park was such a small hamlet, quite rural and isolated with just a few families, all of whom were farmers. Around the middle of the century, new immigrants arrived and it seems everyone became an entrepreneur, of course that word was unknown to them. They just wanted to make a living. Most of them had some kind of trade and skill, and therefore the inhabitants had not far to go to satisfy their needs; there was a blacksmith, a harness shop, a bakery and a butcher, later even a cigar factory, a grocery store and of course not only one, but several inns.

What Hyde Park did not have was a medical doctor, and those early settlers relied mostly on home remedies. They brewed herbs as a beverage to drink or be applied as compresses. And no house was without: "HEILOEL." It came in a glass bottle with black gothic lettering on a white label and people just swore by its healing properties. HEILOEL is a German word and means: "healing oil." It was basically some menthol in an alcohol base. At that time work meant physical labor, so muscle pain was very prevalent and HEILOEL a welcome remedy.

A rural doctor had to serve a large area, so he left a postcard with his patients to be mailed when they were in need of him. To the left you see a copy of Dr. E. G. Rave's card. His address is already printed on it so the patient just had to write his name on the back. Then when there were several patients, Dr. Rave came by horse and buggy from Hicksville.

If you think that's strange, I have a more outlandish tale, although at that time people didn't find it peculiar. My grandmother was almost 80 yrs. old when she suffered a gallbladder attack. She wouldn't think of going to a hospital in the city, so the doctor with the nurse came to the house and that's where he performed the operation: right on the kitchen table. He must have been skillful and had his instruments sterilized, because my grandmother not only survived the surgery, but lived a few more years.

77-YEAR-OLD APPENDIX

TAKEN FROM WOMAN

Mrs. E. Christ of Jericho Turnpike, New Hyde Park, after living 77 years with an appendix has had it removed. She also was operated on for gall stones and is recovering.

Dr. Stumpf of Queens performed the operation which took away Mrs. Christ's appendix and at the same time some gall stones. The aged woman went through the double operation without any difficulty and showed a wonderful vitality which is helping her to recover rapidly.

Besides the recent operation, Mrs. Christ has overcome an attack of pneumonia and sleeping sickness which kept her ill for a couple of months. She is considered a wonder.

1529 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

"The Compound Oxygen Treatment," Drs. Starkey & Palen, No. 1529 Arch Street, Philadelphia, have been using for the last twenty years, is a scientific adjustment of the elements of Oxygen and Nitrogen magnetized, and the compound is so condensed and made portable that it is sent all over the world.

"COMPOUND OXYGEN" being taken into the system, the Brain, Spinal Marrow, and the Nerve-Ganglia—"Nervous Centres"—are nourished and made more active. Thus the Fountain Head of all activity, both mental and physical, is restored to a state of integrity, and the nervous system, the organs, and the muscles all act more kindly and efficiently.

When "Compound Oxygen" is inhaled, the heart has imparted to it increased vitality. That organ sends forth the blood with more force and less wear to itself; the vital currents leave on their circuit new deposits of vital force in every cell of tissue over which they pass, and return again to the lungs for a new supply. This is a rational explanation of the greatest advance medical science has yet made.

OFFICE PATIENTS are under our personal inspection and care, visiting the office daily, or as frequently as their cases may require. We have a corps of six physicians, including ourselves, one of whom is a lady of large and varied experience, who is in constant attendance. Call, see, and judge of this treatment by inhalation. Consultations FREE.

When I was a child we had a "Sanitarium" in Floral Park. It was staffed by a midwife and a visiting doctor, and some women went there to give birth. They also kept some old folks who were recuperating from sickness.

In the early twenties, it became quite fashionable to have childrens tonsils removed. The belief was that it would prevent colds. One day a salesman went from house to house in New Hyde Park to urge mothers to sign their children for surgery. My mother signed me and my older sister Bethel and after we were promised some ice cream, off we went and had our tonsils removed. It was not very traumatic for me, but Bethel was in pain and couldn't even taste the ice cream.

As for my mother, I am not sure what her motives were. Did she think of doing what's best for her children, or did we have the surgery, because she got two for one.

Cities had modern hospitals already, but New Hyde Park was quite rural yet. You know what we have now: Doctors and hospitals and Healthcare centers. And to think: All that within my own lifetime.

25 - War

Spanish American War

During the short history of our country, we have already fought quite a few wars and now (Sept. 1994), that Cuba is daily in the news, one is reminded of the Spanish American War. Spain was a mighty power in the last century, in possession of vast territories; amongst them Cuba. The Cubans wanted their independence, but their revolt against Spain failed and the Spanish government in 1896 instituted the "Reconcentrate" system by which Cuban population was isolated, and thousands died from disease, starvation and exposure.

In the U. S. the sympathy for the Cuban insurgents ran high, but President McKinley did not want to involve the country in a war. Several incidents occurred, one of which was the sinking of the US Battleship Maine in Havana harbor on Feb. 15, 1898, with a loss of 260 men. United States citizens were outraged, and by April 1898 we were at war with Spain. Our army consisted of 17,000 men, all volunteers. They were poorly trained, poorly equipped, but full of enthusiasm. Although the war was short, more died from disease than from wounds.

Peter A. Petersen

One of those enthusiastic volunteers was a resident of New Hyde Park, who never tired of telling about his participation in the heavy fighting at El Caney and San Juan Hill. He was fortunate as he neither got wounded, nor came down with a disease. His name should be on a plaque with the names of our veterans, but somehow through an oversight was omitted.

Peter A. Petersen was born in Denmark in 1878 but came to the United States as a young man and settled in New Hyde Park. He was a carpenter by trade, and his work was in demand by the rich people on the North Shore. When he returned from the war, he married in 1903 and built for his wife Pauline, a house on 5th Avenue all with his own hands with lumber from Camp Black in Garden City. His children were: Thelma in 1904, Mildred in 1907, Alice in 1910 and Harold in 1913. After the incorporation of the Village of New Hyde Park, Thelma became the first Registrar.

Peter A. Petersen was active in the community. He was a member of the First Reformed Church, a Mason and an Odd Fellow. He also belonged to the New Hyde Park Civic Association, the Shield of Honor and the Veterans of Foreign Wars. Peter A. Petersen died in 1959.

26 - New Hyde Park Inn

In 1898 there were already 5 Inns in New Hyde Park. The Village was still small, but already had a Post Office, and it was a favored spot for farmers for a break on their way to the market. That year Joseph Filarski bought property on the southwest corner of Jericho Turnpike and South 3rd Street. The land belonged to the Kelsey Family, but the last one to farm it has passed on and the heirs were not interested in continuing the tradition. They parceled it off and put it up for sale. Joseph Filarski's plot was large: 100 feet x 100 feet and he intended to build a Hotel. He really had great confidence in himself and thought New Hyde Park could support an other establishment. Yet he wanted it to be different. The farmers could stop at any Inn, so his place had to be better - larger stables for the horses with watering troughs and grooms. Nicholas Reuters Inn at the railroad station had a dance hall, so he intended to have a ballroom. His place was to be elegant, attracting not only farmers, but even wealthy residents of the area. The building had light tan brick veneer with green trim. A wraparound porch was enveloping the structure and the interior was dark wood paneling, which was very fashionable at that time. When it was finished with trees planted to enhance the appearance, it was the most elegant establishment around and Joseph Filarski named it the "Grand Central Hotel."

He was not disappointed in his expectations. His Grand Hotel was an immediate success. The bicycle came into vogue and many bicycle clubs were formed whose members came to Filarski's Hotel for meetings. Later, during the Vanderbilt Cup Races, many of the rich people booked rooms there. New Hyde Park thought of itself as quite an important place and many residents, especially the business people, toyed with the idea of having the hamlet developed into a resort area. They thought the land attractive and the greenhouses and flower fields of John Lewis Childs in adjacent Floral Park added to the beauty of the place. But times changed. Farmers took advantage of trucks and the railroad and New Hyde Park never became a resort and vacation spot. After 12 years in the business, Filarski sold out in 1910. The new owners were a German couple: Robert Kalweit and his wife bought the place in 1910 and operated it in a typical German fashion by placing emphasis on plentiful and good German food and drink. Now the place was not a "Grand Central Hotel" any more, and Robert Kalweit renamed it the "Brauhof." Things went well until prohibition, and the bar had to be closed.

During that time, I was a newspaper boy delivering the "Brooklyn Eagle", one of my customers was Robert Kalweit. I had to deliver right to the customers and therefore I always entered the place. The front door was locked, and I had to use the side door. Somehow the place looked quite spooky to me. The interior was only dimly lit, and the dark paneling added to the gloomy feeling.

Yet there were always people at the bar, which I could not understand. What were they drinking? When I finally asked some adults around town, I found out Mr. Kalweit was running a speakeasy. He must have made a living, because he never defaulted on any bills or taxes. Though the place was somehow run down, the building was still imposing, but without legitimate customers it lacked any atmosphere. So in 1938, it went up for sale and was bought by Willy and Rita Rueck. They opened on January 6, 1939, and once again a woman took over the kitchen. Her dishes and specialties were so delicious and outstanding that the reputation of the Inn was such to attract a clientele from a very large area. Gradually they made changes to the building and today the New Hyde Park Inn is again a grand place. Rita passed on, though Willy is still around greeting guests. Now the establishment is managed by his son Karl.

27 - Development of Jericho Turnpike

Contributed By: Mrs. G. Henry

Roads evolved slowly in the 17th and 18th centuries. Paths were worn from house to barn and neighbor to neighbor. Outside of the villages, cattle lanes were followed by sledge and cart. Surveyors laid out highways with transitory landmarks (and idiosyncratic spelling).

"Surveyed and Layed out a highway to be continued out of the highway that leads from Hempstead to Herricks round a watering place known as Clay Pitts 4 Rocks west ... and out of the furrow road... round a watering place known by the name of Wett Holes..." Property lines were no more specific. In 1703, Samuel Clowes, surveyor and the first lawyer to settle on Long Island was hired to plot a piece of property. His report reads:

"A draft of a fifty acre Lott of wood Land Lying on the north side of ye Greate Plaines near Herricks ... beginning at a white ocke tree standing in ye north east corner of a fifty acre Parsell of Land ... Marked with 3 noches on tow side and ye letters II in ye middle of ye noches it runs Eaighty Rods East to a walnut saplin ..."

The ancient, mid-island Indian trail was used by the first settlers as they led their cattle to the plains natural pasture, and then by the Jamaica residents as they traveled eastward. Soon we find that stretch of road called the Jamaica Road.

In 1724, as the little villages grew and new settlements sprang up, the old footpaths were less than adequate, and the General Assembly of the Province of New York passed a act to revise local road systems. Surveyors laid out the North, South and Middle Country Roads on the island now called "Nassau". Years passed before the work was completed, but finally the Middle Country Road followed that same meandering path etched by Indians centuries earlier.

By the late Eighteenth Century, stages traversed the highways. Little more than great boxes mounted on springs, roofed with canvas or leather curtains to be let down in inclement weather, they offered the first public land transportation. Uncomfortable at best when the roads were dry, passengers were jostled as the great wooden wheels hit rut and stone, but far worse, when the ground thawed or rain fell, was the mud. Horses slipped and foundered, wheels sank hub deep and to a man, passengers dismounted to lighten the load and assist the driver.

In 1785, when the site specified as the "geographical center of Queens County" was selected for a new courthouse, it proved to be a little village plot on the north side of the highway. Since the eastern towns were more populous then, much of the traffic came from that direction, and that stretch of highway that led to the building was called "the road from Jericho to the Courthouse."

So we can trace, right from its beginnings, the oldest road on Long Island, our Jericho Turnpike. One hundred years later, the highway is called Jamaica Avenue from the city-line westward and of course Jericho Turnpike to the east. We might still wonder why part of the name is "turnpike". As the need for well maintained roads became ever more necessary, it was clear that the people who used them in some way would have to support the cost of maintenance. By 1807, the general turnpike laws were standardized, and Jericho Road from Jamaica to Oyster Bay became a toll road. The old highway was somewhat widened and straightened and toll gates were installed (locally at Rocky Hill Road and Willis Avenue). At first the local farmers were disgruntled at the prospect of paying to use what was considered a public highway, but the advantages soon became apparent as the road was maintained capably and travel was a bit easier.

1885 - William Gartrell, wagon builder, the largest building and factory in New Hyde Park. Corner of 2nd Street and Jericho Turnpike (Sleep's Now)

For almost forty years, the Jericho Turnpike Co. prevailed, but increased travel and the ubiquitous mud continued to be a serious problem. A much heralded forerunner of the hard surfaced highway was coming into its own, and in 1853 road rights were sold to the Jericho Plank Road Co.

The road bed was excavated and lined with great stones. Heavy planks laid horizontally provided a relatively smooth road surface. It seemed, for a time, to be perfect solution to the beleaguered traveler, but it too, after years of use, proved less than satisfactory. Planks shifted and rotted and even then it was recognized that the continued use of large quantities of lumber was not practical or economical. Reportedly with some measure of relief, the company issued a "surrender of abandonment" to the county in 1891.

A new sport was emerging at this time, and surprisingly, it had a rather dramatic effect on the country's highways. With the development of the pneumatic tire, the bicycle became enormously popular and cycling clubs were formed throughout the country. These enthusiasts insisted upon well maintained, smooth surfaced roads and since a new surfacing material named for its inventor McAdam had been recently introduced, they were accommodated. Bicycles were licensed and guide boards were posted at country crossing, forerunners of today's road signs.

McAdam finished roads were now expected as the norm and they paved the way, literally and figuratively, for future development. Electrical energy had been harnessed for industrial use, and tracks for electrically powered trolleys were laid out between villages.

During the summer of 1906, the New York and Long Island Traction Company opened a trolley line along Jericho Turnpike. A single set of tracks ran along north side of the highway, with sidings stopped every few miles to allow the eastbound trolley to pull off the main track to allow the car heading west to pass by. The fare was 5¢ a zone, a half-fare rate for students. Connecting lines ran north and south and the Port Washington car boasted a pot bellied stove to warm its passengers.

The old road had come a long way, but there were still some problems along the way. The road we know as our western village boundary, Denton Avenue, follows the bed of an ancient river which carried glacial waters to the ocean. The turnpike dropped so deeply as it crossed the natural decline that it was often flooded, and heavy snow made the road impassable to vehicles. The little green work trolley with its large, front-mounted rotary broom could handle a light snowfall, but a substantial accumulation guaranteed a school holiday for students who traveled by trolley to Hempstead, Jamaica and Mineola High Schools.

By the late 1920's, the refinement of the automotive engine enabled people to travel independently, and newly formed bus companies established routes, which were to mark the eventual demise of the quaint orange and yellow turnpike trolleys.

In 1925, the county contracted with the E. T. Earl Co. to update the road once again. The sharp drop at Denton was filled somewhat, and the company straightened some sharp bends and cemented the roadway.

While we can trace the development of Jericho Turnpike from the days when Indians camped there to the modern artery it is today, we can also discover how some of our secondary roads developed.

On our eastern boundary, from the turnpike to Herricks, the old road from Herricks to the Courthouse became simply Herricks Road. South of Jericho, the same byway was called Clowesville Lane. The western boundary, the old Tanners Pond Road, gradually came to be called Denton Avenue. After the Denton family bought the property surrounding their homesite (now McDonald's). The old County Courthouse Road once veered southwest (it continues in Franklin Square) to meet the South Country Road and then east to Hempstead. As County Courthouse Road crosses Jericho, it continues northeasterly and is called Marcus Avenue. That familiar road was so named in 1910, some years after a large part of its southern "counterpart" had disappeared, by the Supervisor of the County for his son, Marcus G. Christ.

Nassau Boulevard, an integral part of the new community Garden City developed in the closing years of the Nineteenth Century, moved northward slowly. Hoping to capitalize on success of the elegant Garden City community, the Garden City Estates Company proposing a similar development to the north decided to extend Nassau Boulevard. Wanting to preserve the malled format and eliminate the grade crossing, the new road was created intersecting Jericho Turnpike at a right angle. Mr. Ernest Marshall, whose father, Cyril E. Marshall, was the engineer for the project, writes "...my father played a part in the location of the boulevard north of the tracks. As a dummy, he bought the lots which were to be used for extension of the boulevard ... The developers of Garden City Estates were afraid the price would rise if it were known they were interested in these lots ... The land north of the track had been mapped... and the rectangular block system existed, at least on paper... Atlantic Avenue, Fulton Avenue and Broadway ran east and west as they do today, parallel with the railroad. Running from Broadway, a few hundred feet west of County Courthouse Road was Emerald Street, a fifty-foot-wide street only a couple of blocks in length. Using this as a starter..." And so they continued Nassau Boulevard to Jericho Turnpike. During the late 20's, the boulevard crept across the highway to run a bit further north to accommodate the newly built homes of Spanish architecture at the east end of First and Second Streets. By 1939, further development caused the continuation of the street as far as Sixth Street and finally, in the 50's it was fully extended to its juncture with Marcus Avenue.

Central Avenue was from the 1870's a road of sorts, for some of its old homes were built during that period. In 1925, in anticipation of the first school in Garden City Park opening, Central Avenue was cemented.

By the end of the second world war, everyone's dream of owning a home was being fulfilled, and the farmland of the plains gave way to the real estate developer. Streets were laid out and quickly paved. In 1957-1958, sewer systems were installed and a few years later curbstones were laid to define the many little streets.

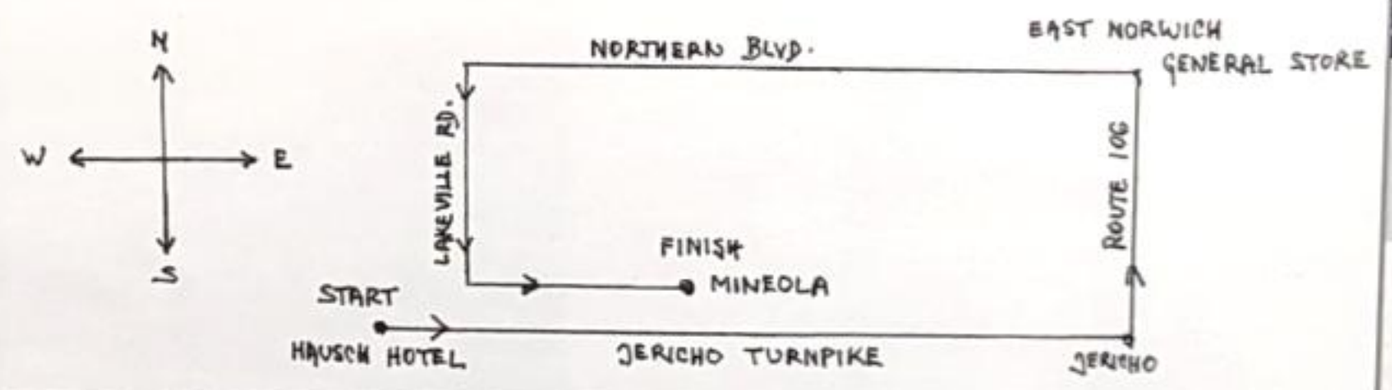
ROUTE OF "VANDERBILT - CUP" RACES



"Vanderbilt Cup" races and race route.

28 - "Vanderbilt Cup" Races

The "Vanderbilt Cup" was indeed a handsome trophy. It consisted of 30 pounds of silver and was designed by Louis Comfort Tiffany. It cost $2,000.00 which doesn't sound like much compared to today's prizes. Of course the cup was of interest only to the racers. The spectators as many as 250,000 wanted to see the cars. They were racing cars, especially designed for high performance and out of reach for even the affluent people of the community. They were the playthings of the rich. William Kissam Vanderbilt Jr. who, with his Mercedes was already competing in Europe, wanted to bring the races close to home. His estate was formerly Deepdale Golf Club and is now used by the Village of Lake Success. The 30-mile route he proposed was from New Hyde Park Jericho Turnpike right on the corner of Hausch Hotel east to Jericho, then north to East Norwich, then west along Northern Boulevard and south on Lakeville Road, back to New Hyde Park with the finish in Mineola. Many farmers were opposed. The roads were only dirt roads, cattle wandered freely, and they thought the whole undertaking just too dangerous. But Vanderbilt wasn't a Vanderbilt for nothing. He was able to convince the Nassau County Board of Supervisors of the merits of the races, that they would stimulate interest in the development of cars and roads. The board approved and the first race was held on October 8, 1904. What a sight that was: spectators all over even sitting on the telephone poles. People were pulling and pushing and the farmers were right; it was dangerous and someone got killed. So Vanderbilt proposed to construct a Long Island Motor Parkway which was to be a 45-mile toll road but used for racing. In 1908, a 9-mile section from Westbury to Bethpage was completed. Meanwhile the races were held every year. Every year there were spectators from all over, and every year someone got killed. So in 1910, the State legislature passed a law prohibiting races on public roads. Some people in New Hyde Park were glad, but many thought the races gave the village some importance and added to the prestige. There are no more "Vanderbilt Cup" races, there is no more the old Long Island Motor Parkway. But the automobile is triumphant! No more a plaything of the rich, but a necessity. And there are roads and parkways and an Expressway crisscrossing all over the island.

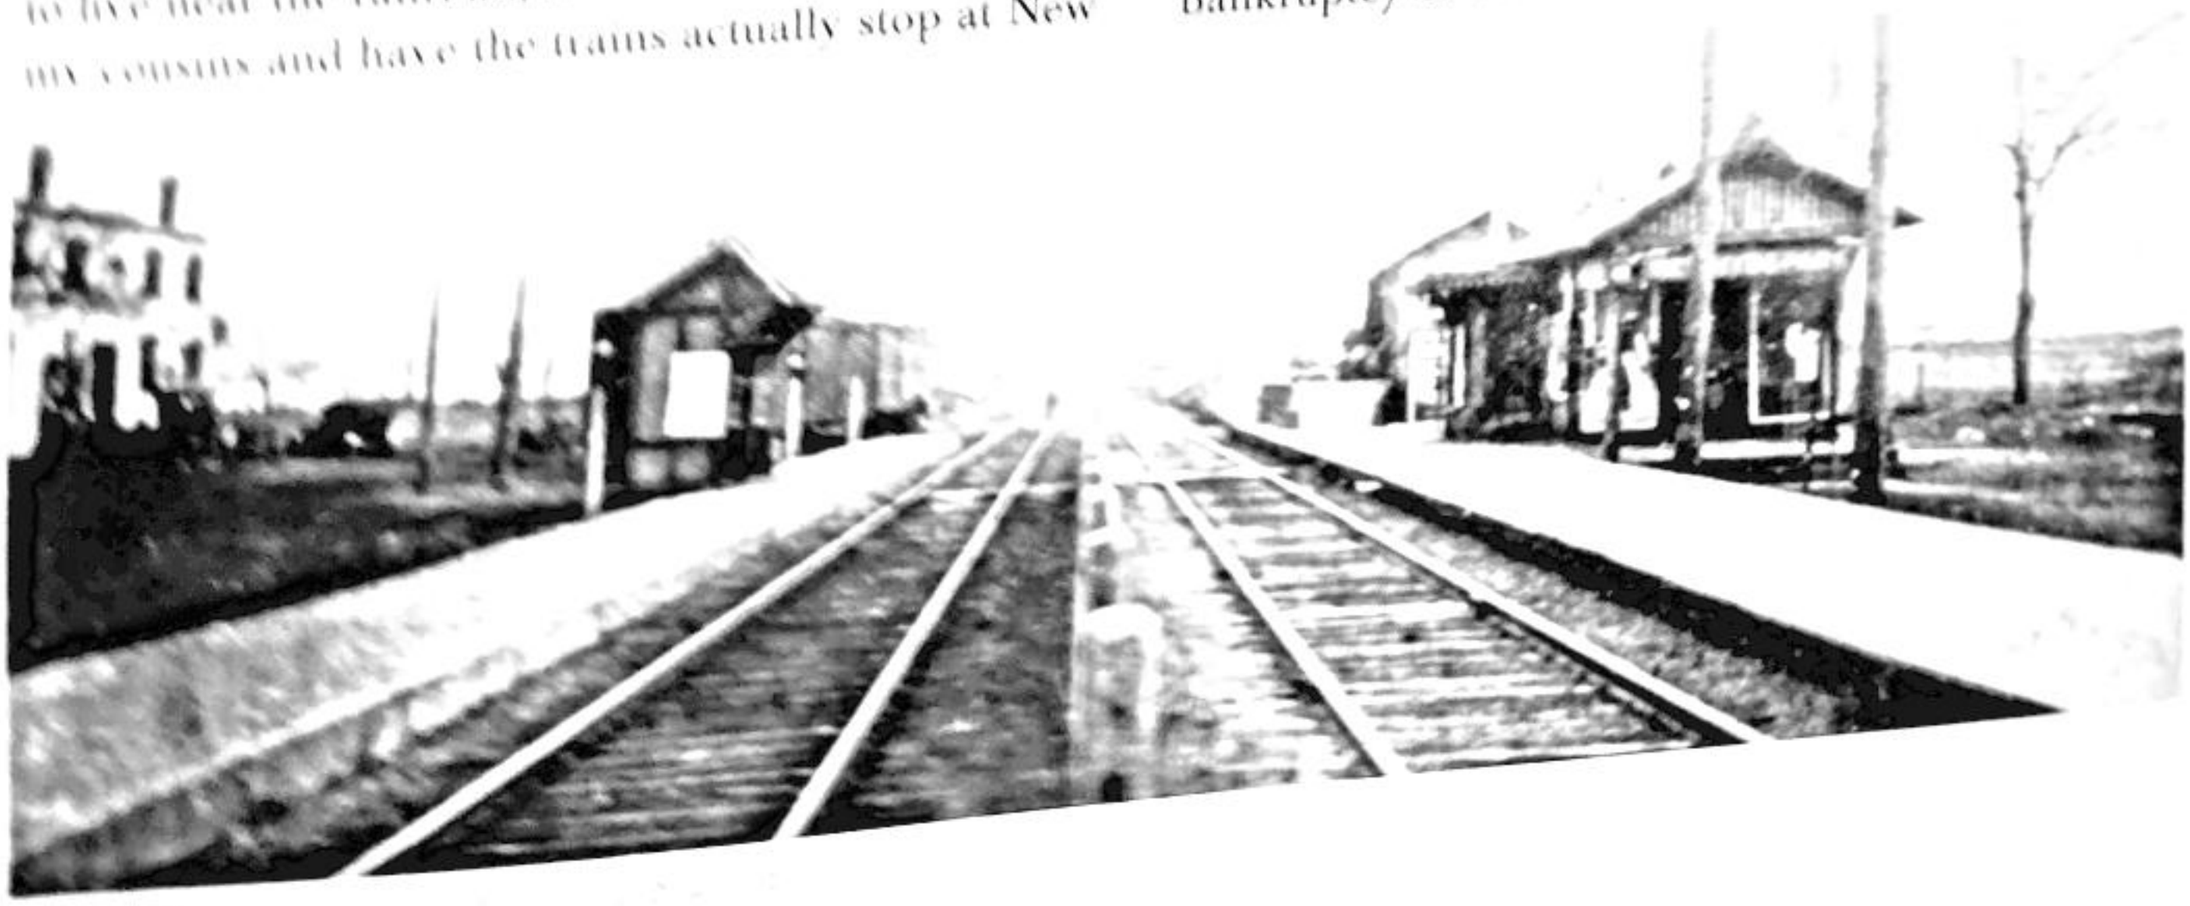
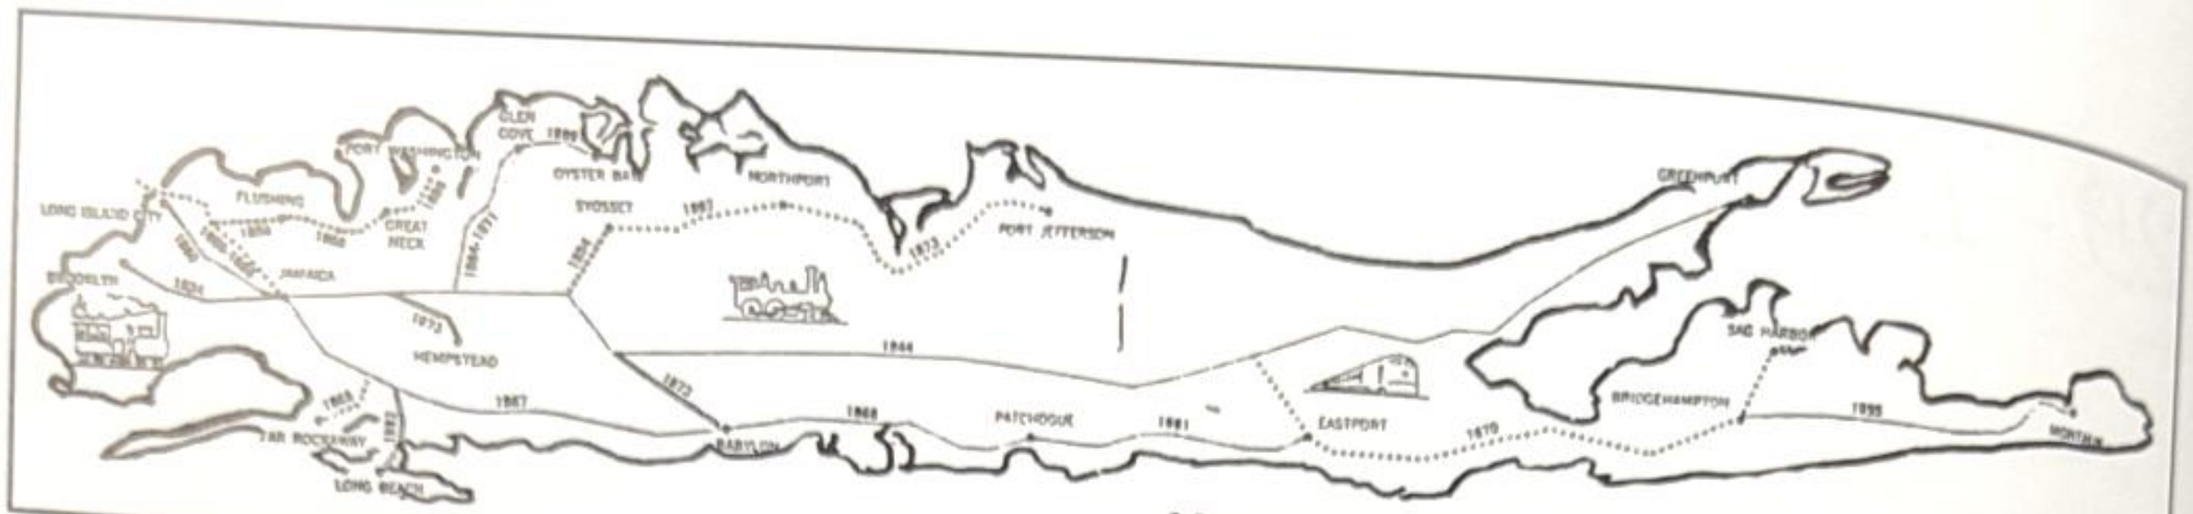
29 - Long Island Railroad

One of the thrills of my childhood was to go down to the station and watch the trains. At that time there was still a lot of freight moved by rail and reading the names of the various companies, I could just marvel at the distant places they originated. But the greatest pleasure was to watch the passenger trains. When my cousins visited, the first thing they wanted to do was to go down to the station. There was no raised platform yet and the station house was not more than a little hut. We were standing in the road watching the departure of the train. The signal man gave the "all clear sign," the conductor hallowed "All on Board," and the locomotive started to move slowly with the Choo-choo sound, which became louder and faster, the whistle blew. We waved to the motor man and the conductor. The sound faded into the distance, and we watched the train disappear. We were left with a longing to be on the train ourselves. I felt privileged to live near the railroad, to show off the station to my cousins and have the trains actually stop at New Hyde Park. When my grandmother moved to Hyde Park, she was not that fortunate. The Long Island Rail Road at that time was in financial difficulties, and the stop at Hyde Park was eliminated.

April 24, 1834, marked the birth of the L.I.R.R. with a charter from New York State. The project was to lay tracks from Brooklyn to Greenport to move freight from New England to New York. It was assumed that the terrain in Connecticut was too rugged and not suitable for train service. There were 17 original charter signers who put up the money for the L.I.R.R. the cost of which was to be a million and a half dollars. They chose to build the 95-mile line through the middle of the island because it was the flattest and least populated route, and therefore the most direct and the cheapest to complete. Meanwhile there were rival companies; at one time as many as twenty separate ones criss-crossing the Island. They did not last, went into bankruptcy or were later taken over by the L.I.R.R.





Map showing how the Long Island Railroad grew.

It took 3 years to complete the 15-mile stretch from Brooklyn to Hicksville, which was just empty land at that time, no hamlet yet and was only later named Hicksville after Lawrence Hicks, who was one of the original signers. The line was to have two stops for taking on of water and refueling: one at Hardscrabble (now Farmingdale), the other at Punk's Hole (now Manorville).

Finally in 1844, the construction was completed and the inaugural run was held July 17, 1844. The railroad was an immediate success, but with the farmers along the route though. The sparks from the woodburning engines caused fires and damage to fields and livestock and farmers fought the railroad in court.

For just a few years, L.I.R.R. monopolized travel between Boston and Brooklyn, but in 1848 the rival railroad succeeded in laying tracks for an "All Rail Service" from Boston to New York. Moving freight through New England was now much more convenient and soon the L.I.R.R. found itself in bankruptcy. In 1850, it went into receivership and was saved when the legislature in Albany voted a $100,000.00 loan to bail out the company. The railroad had some more ups and downs, but eventually acquired the lines through the populated areas of the Island, and with the opening of the East River tunnels in 1910 the commuters had direct access to Penn Station and New York City.

Today the Long Island Rail Road is the most heavily traveled local railroad in the world and moves over 70 million people a year.

OLD AND NEW. Spic and span new LIRR Station above is now in service at New Hyde Park, replacing veteran depot in use since 1888, when public spirited founders of village passed the hat for $250. Successor cost $35,000, includes a waiting room, ticket office, rest rooms. Old station which lost a close construction race with the post office severed thousands of commuters, and was an entraining point for throngs of Army-bound men inducted through Selective Service Board 725.

N. B.—The rate of speed fixed by the Ordinance of the Mayor and Council of Corporation of Brooklyn, must occupy twenty-two minutes between Clove Road and the Depot at South Ferry, viz:—Five Minutes between the Depot and the East Gate of the Tunnel; Ten Minutes between said East Gate to the East end of the Plank, at the present crossing of Flatbush Road, preceded by a man with a flag, on horse-back; and Seven Minutes from thence to said Clove Road. Engineers and Conductors will be held strictly answerable for exceeding the rate of speed fixed by said Ordinance.

The full-faced type and figures, "with line underneath," show the Passing and Meeting Stations.

Passenger Trains, on signal of a Red Flag in due time, will stop at Westbury, Carl Place and Waverly.

Trains must not proceed at the time fixed, until twenty minutes have expired, if the Meeting Trains have not arrived. No Train is allowed or permitted to pass any place, or Station named as a place to stop, until the time is fully spent; and Trains are required to stop (inert) to set down or take up Passengers at the Platform, or place fixed. Passengers are therefore cautioned not to step on or off the Cars when in motion, and not to ride on the platform.

Trains will be run on Hempstead Branch to connect with the main line.

☞ Freight and Extra Trains must not occupy the time fixed in the Table for Passenger Trains, but must observe said time, and keep out of the way.

The Time kept at the Brooklyn Depot will govern the Time fixed in the above Table.

32 - Biography

If I could write like James Michener, my story would be written with great skill and wit and would captivate the attention of my readers. But what I lack in creativity, I make up in sincerity and honesty and the telling of growing up, learning, living and aging of one boy, in one place, over more than 80 years should be of interest.

My earliest memories are of my mother singing, my grandmother holding me and telling stories, and my older sister wheeling me in a carriage. There was life and excitement in my home. In addition to my grandmother, my Aunt Mae lived with us, aunts, uncles and cousins came to visit, and we in turn visited them.

Those were glorious days: the days of my childhood. New Hyde Park was a magic place: still very rural, not much developed, surrounded by farms with horses still in use and my father busy shoeing them. My mother cooked our meals on a wood stove, and we had kerosene lamps for light. Pigeons were my fathers hobby, but we raised chickens for food. Both my parents were gardeners, and I myself took early in life an interest in flowers and vegetables, and to this day, you can find me gardening. My favorite flowers are dahlias, and every year my garden is in bloom with them.

Dahlia Show

There were large trees in the village, and my friends from the neighborhood and I used to climb them. My favorite one was on Herkomer Street with a wide crown where one could sit comfortably. Right across the street we had two ponds and when they froze over in the winter, we had a very convenient ice skating place. I learned to roller skate and learned swimming in the Long Island Sound. I suppose, I learned a lot from the grown-ups, just by observing them, but my early years were only play. No preschool, no kindergarten. I always enjoyed all the games: Hide and Seek, tag, Johnny Ride the Pony and Ring a Livio. As I got older, I played tennis, baseball, and later football. But that was much later. First I had to start school. For six years I went to the old school which is now the Village Hall and then to the Road School from where I graduated. Sewanhaka High School was just being built, so I had to enroll in Hempstead High. The fare for the bus ride to school was ten cents a day. After a year at Hempstead High, I went for three years to Sewanhaka and graduated in 1933.

But let me get back to my childhood. The village was small and Jericho Turnpike was the place where the action was. My mother never turned a child away, all the friends were welcome and there were always apples in the house. In the summer we had homemade ice cream. Children used to lineup to help cranking the machine, because then they were treated to a dish of delicious frozen dessert. You can just imagine how popular my house was.

When I started Sunday School, our teacher was Mr. Peter A. Peterson (the Spanish War veteran). By that time there were already a few cars in New Hyde Park, and he owned a Model T Ford. After services, he took a few boys in his car and we visited the estates on the north shore, where he worked as a carpenter. He always included me and when we came to the estates, he shook hands with all the staff and called each of them either brother or sister. At first I was wondering, because I knew they were not his brothers and sisters. But he was a wise man and taught us to treat everyone with respect. Sometimes during the summer or fall, he would take us all the way to Shinnacock Canal. That's where I had my first sight and taste of beach plums.

Another person who took an interest in us was my friend Hap's (Harold Weidner) older brother Skyler. He attended Farmingdale College and took us out there to show us the cows and pigs and other various animals and to explain horticulture. In the village itself were still several artisans who worked at their trade, and I could watch them at their work.

Our earliest hobby was stamp collecting. We used to trade them and got all excited when we received a foreign stamp. We pasted them in a book, looked up the country and learned a great deal of geography without even knowing it. I never gave up that hobby, and to this day I work on my stamps almost daily. All my friends save stamps for me, and now after all those years my collection is quite extensive.

My other friend Charlie Cross lived on Herkomer Street and we two built ourselves a telegraph so we could communicate with each other. At that time people already had radios, and our signal interfered with their reception. One evening when I called Charlie, he rushed into the basement. But this time his father followed him, we were found out and that was the end of the telegraph. This didn't concern us too much, because pretty soon we had another hobby. The newspaper printed instructions on how to build a radio. All we needed was a crystal, some wire, earphones, and a round oatmeal container. We listened to the broadcasts, and what excitement and thrill it was when we could receive a station as far away as Pittsburgh KDKA and WEAF.

My favorite subjects in high school were history and printing. The original Arland Printing Shop was first located on the north side of Jericho Turnpike, where now Umberto is, and was owned by Sal Messina. Later he moved across the street to where now Baron's law offices are. Sal Messina had a very hard time during the depression, and the whole family lived right in the store. There was just a curtain separating the shop from the living quarters. While Sal was out soliciting business, his wife Millie ran the press and sometimes my friend Charlie Cross and I helped her out. In spite of all the hard times, Sal was cheerful. He was another one who was a role model for us. Evenings we went with him to places where there was a piano and Sal could really play. He also composed music and there are still some of his songs being published. I liked one of his Christmas songs, but my favorite was: "Im'a Lik'a Pizza Pie". After the war, Sal sold the business to Irving Eisenberg, and he moved it to the present location.

As a teenager, it was not only school and play, I also started work. At first it was just being a paper-boy delivering the Brooklyn Eagle. That was a steady job. I also delivered telegrams. We picked them up at the station and received 25 cents per delivery. When the weather was good, I was a caddie on the golf course. We boys had to stand at attention in a row and when the golfers arrived, the caddymaster picked a boy for them. At that time I was so impressed with the golfers. I thought they were the most important people. That job paid a dollar a round with an occasional 10 cent tip.

When my sister Carol was a toddler (there is a 10 year difference between us), I built a little go-cart to wheel her around. I always helped my father.

George and Carol in the go-cart.

As a teen, and even to this day, I take every job seriously and am determined to do the very best I can. I worked in my father's shop, did plumbing, delivered radiators, and when one of my father's houses needed a roof, I was the roofer.

In 1933, I graduated high school and was now considered an adult. As such, I had to get a job. But it was the height of the depression and there were no jobs. A man by the name of Roland Hasard had a stamp business and as stamps were my love and hobby, he offered me a job as his manager. He bought the stamps wholesale, and we made up packets which we sold for 2-1/2 cents to Woolworth, Walgreen and Goldsmith Brothers. They in turn sold them for 5 cents a piece. That business was very labor intensive, and at times we had a dozen women employed. (One of them was Mrs. Edna Whaley who was to become my brother's mother-in-law.) The women worked at home and probably had their children helping them. But there was not much money in it. Not for the women, not for me, not for the owner, and the business failed.

1936 - Turkey farm at the Baer residence.

All over the country people were struggling just to survive. We had enough food and my mother came into an inheritance, but my father's business did poorly. I thought of selling through the mail. I bought a small printing press and setup a small shop on 1 North 12th Street. I printed circulars but I was not successful. I even started to raise turkeys together with Milton Baer on his property. The price of fowl dropped, and that killed the turkey business.

Then came a break. We still had farms in New Hyde Park and the biggest land owner here was Fred Schumacher. He irrigated his farms and hired us. He was farming on New Hyde Park Road, Herrick's Road, Union Turnpike, Lake Success, Garden City Park, Roslyn, and Muttontown. In addition, he owned apartment houses in Hempstead. I did all the plumbing work, and later my brother Carl joined me. The farms were in operation till late 1950. When property became too expensive to be used just for farming, he sold out, but he donated parcels to churches and even to the city of New York.

On June 16, 1941, I was inducted into the army and life as I knew it came to and end. I entered the service together with my friend Charlie Cross, but we were separated and my basic training was at Camp Croft in South Carolina. Many found the training a hardship, but I did not fight the army. With all that physical labor I performed in the preceding years, I was strong and my body fit and healthy and even after bootcamp, I joined the recruits in their exercises. I was sent to Fort Benning, Georgia, for parachute training and after that to communication school. The completion of the course earned me stripes, and in time, I became staff sergeant. To this day I think that's the best rank to have. By 1942, war was imminent, and I was sent to Carolina and Tennessee for maneuvers and to Camp McKall for final training before being send overseas. We embarked the liberty ship James Parker and left from Staten Island in January 1944 for Belfast, Ireland. Early spring we were in Nottingham, England.

I've described my experience in a separate article. I only want to mention that during all the months I was a combat soldier, I never saw a cameraman or a war correspondent. The photo of my outfit on Hill 30 was taken by a Lieutenant who had a camera with him.

In 1945, we were at Chartes, France, when the war ended. From there we were sent to Frankfurt, Germany and the 508 was declared Eisenhower's Honor Guard. It was a transition to civilian life. We had food, clothing and most of all, shelter. There was entertainment and laundry service. Henry Wieser, my brother-in-law, was also stationed in Germany. He had a car and when he visited me we went sight-seeing. After six months in Germany, I came home November 1945.

I was a soldier from June 16, 1941 to November 10, 1945. I spent 1 year, 10 months and 8 days overseas (168 days as a combat soldier). There were over 2,000 paratroopers from my outfit jumping on D-Day. Less than one third survived.

I was back home in 1946. A civilian again and working in my father's business. I first joined the American Legion and later the Veterans of Foreign Wars and became a commander in both organizations. It was not my desire to make any waves, but something happened and I entered politics. My brother-in-law, Omar Freeman, spent the war years in the navy and when he came home, he wanted to start a body and fender business. I had property on 1 North 12th

Helen Draxler Wed To George Christ Jr.

Helen Draxler, daughter of Mrs. Anna Draxler of Brooklyn, was married Sunday, December 18th to George E. Christ, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. George E. Christ, Sr. of New Hyde Park.

The wedding took place at the Reformed Church of New Hyde Park at 2:00 P.M. with the Reverend Clinton T. Jenkins officiating.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her uncle, Vincent Graham of New Hyde Park, was attended by Miss Ann Draxler, sister of the bride, as matron of honor. Bridesmaids were Miss Frances Wolfert, Miss Lorraine Smith, Patricia Wilson of Lakeview City and Miss Ellen Hoyt of New Hyde Park.

Mr. Christ served as best man. Ushers were Robert Draxler, brother of the bride and Stanley Zaga of Huntington.

Mrs. Christ is a graduate of Wyoming University and is employed by the Bell Telephone Company of New Hyde Park.

Mr. Christ, also a graduate of Wyoming University, is employed by the Bell Telephone Company of New Hyde Park.

Following a reception at the Hotel Commodore, the couple left on a honeymoon trip to Bermuda. On their return they will reside at 1234 Jericho Turnpike, New Hyde Park.

33 - D-Day

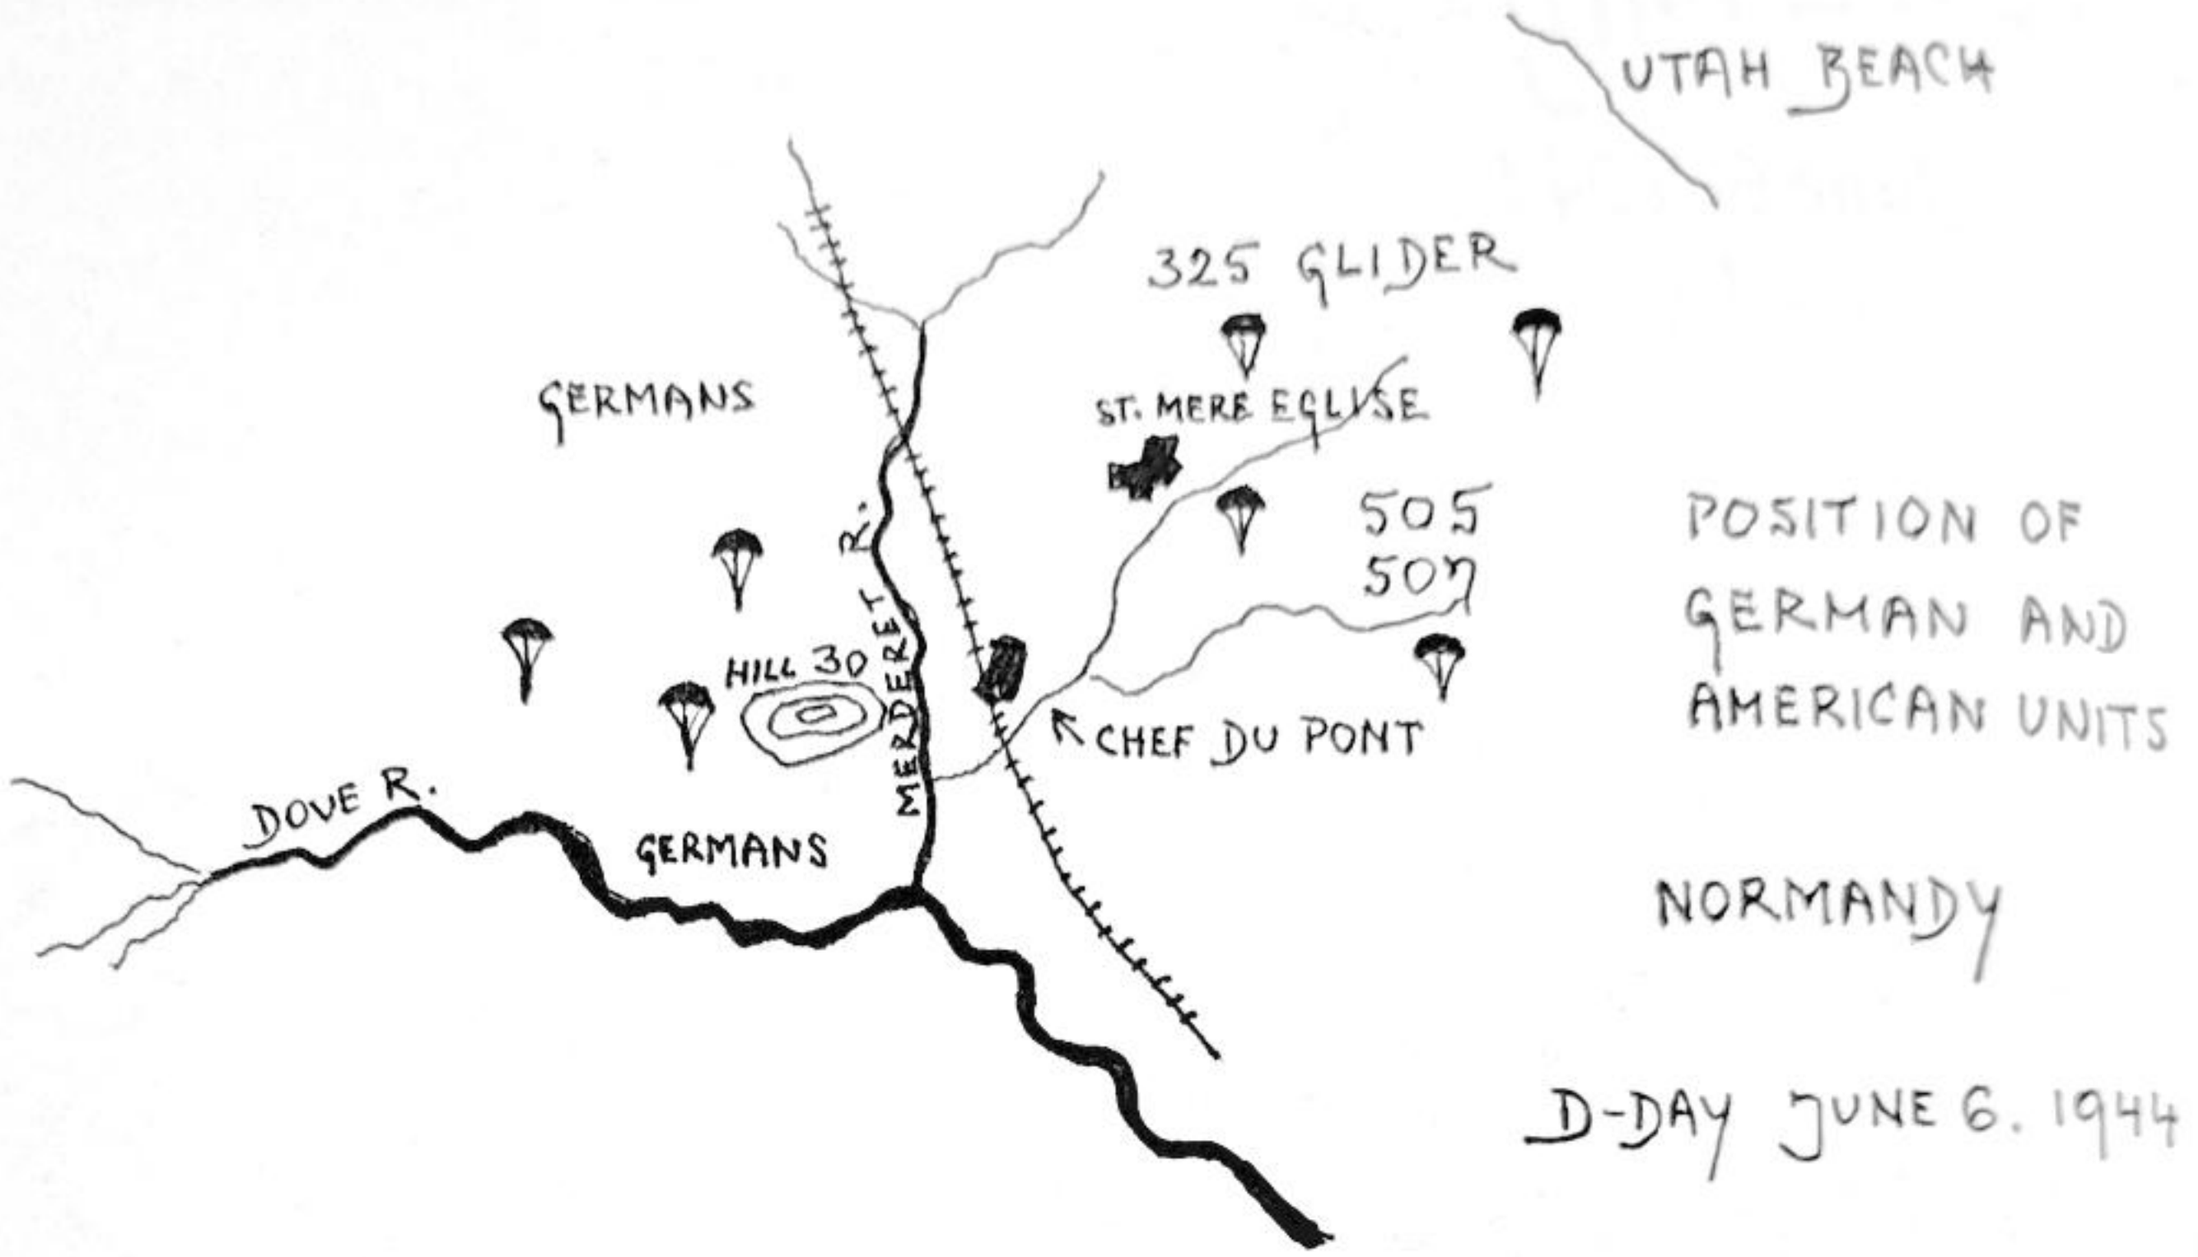
D Day, June 6, 1944
One Soldier's Experience

It was dark. The plane was crossing the Channel, flying toward France. The men in my platoon, with their faces blackened, were trying to doze, get some rest. It has been a long day, and we were about to experience the war firsthand.

Looking out the window, I could see the other planes and was reflecting on my life in the military and all that lead up to this point. I was inducted into the Army June 16, 1941, went to basic, jump school and infantry school and was trained as a radio operator. I was a staff sergeant and part of the cadre to train new recruits, who were to form the "508th Parachute Infantry Regiment."

In England we were stationed in Nottingham, but about a week before the invasion, we were moved to Salty Air Force Base. Of course at the time I did not know the place, as the English had removed all signs. The reason: should a German infiltrate, he would not know the location. That week was the best army experience we ever had. Nobody bothered us. There was gourmet food at all meals, entertainment every night and in between meals, we exercised, cleaned our weapons and packed and repacked the equipment.

Some of the equipment was packed in bundles to be dropped separately, but one can hardly believe how much we had to carry on our own person. Our suits and even our boots were processed to resist gas. The trousers had large patch pockets to store ammunition. We had among other things, a hand grenade, weapons, K Rations and not only one but two parachutes, and even a Mae West Life Preserver. All that was so heavy, that we needed help to board the plane.



As I looked out the window, I could see the other planes, but was oblivious to the big fleet in the Channel ready for the invasion. On approaching France, we ran into a cloud cover and the planes became separated. As our aircraft approached the drop zone, the sky cleared and we jumped. Although there was enemy fire, my jump went smoothly and I landed all intact. But I was all alone. The men I felt responsible for, were nowhere to be seen. There were hedgerows bordering the fields, which was a surprise as they were not shown on the maps and we were not briefed about them.

I had to orient myself. There I was: the communication chief for the whole 2nd battalion, being all by myself and not having a radio. The radios were packed in the equipment bundles, but there were no bundles to be seen anywhere.

The first thing I met was a cow. We just ignored each other and I proceeded to the next field. It was a moonlit night and I could see the tall poles, which were an anti airborne obstacle, reaching for the sky. I encountered two soldiers crying, both hurt during the jump. One could not see and the other was hit in the groin. They were from the 507 Parachute Infantry Regiment. I calmed them down, urged them to be quiet, so not to attract the Germans and administered to both morphine shots. We all carried the drug in our special medical pack.

After promising them to send the medics, I moved on. The purpose of the hedgerows was to keep the cows pent up, but each field had two diagonal openings, secured with a bar, and one could easily enter and leave. At the next field there was a shot down glider and the pilot, who had survived the hit. He was to have landed at Omaha Beach and smooth a landing strip with a small bulldozer he carried in the glider, and then return to England.

I told him "No way can you get back to England." The strangest thing about him was that he had no weapon. That really puzzled me, but now we were two, and I assured him we would get weapons as soon as we found some of the bundles. I also was very anxious to find my own men and, most important, to find out where we were. So we set forth, the pilot and I, in search of the army. It must have been quite a sight. I so heavily loaded down, although minus the chutes, and the pilot with not even a gun. After several minutes we came upon 15 men, an officer amongst them. They were from different units and nobody knew what to do, or where to go. So we just crossed the fields, till we reached a road. By now it was about 4 am and it started to get light as we were on double summertime.

More soldiers came through the hedgerows, and we kept on moving up the road, till we encountered enemy fire. So we turned around and went back. After awhile we again met enemy fire. So we just went back to where we came from. We did that several times. We were just lost and disorganized. But I assume the Germans had the same problem or I would not be around to tell the story.

Our numbers were growing, as more and more soldiers came through the fields and finally there was one with a radio. Col. Shanley was contacted, and we were ordered to Hill 30. By the time we reached the position it was dark and we were exhausted. It was a day, a night, a second day and now another night, and I for one just fell asleep. So did the others and the Germans probably also, because if there was any enemy fire, I for one was unaware of it.

D-Day Plus One, June 7

I have to continue with the story as our mission was not completed yet. At Hill 30, I at last met up with some of the men of my own platoon. I still had the glider pilot with me, who eventually returned to England. But many familiar faces were missing. There was a 17 year old one from Tennessee by the name of Alton Agee who was to be attached to the Battalion commander. He never made it, and I could never find out what happened to him.

There is no record, and he might have landed in the river and drowned. His place was taken by another 17 year old baby face: Bill Biagione, who was more fortunate, is alive and well, living in Connecticut and whom I meet each year at our reunion.

On Hill 30, Col. Shanley had his hands full trying to organize us, as we were from all different regiments. It was Lt. Pollette who activated combat patrols and set up road blocks at various points leading to Hill 30 and preventing the Germans from crossing the bridge over the Merderet River at Chef Du Pont. Of course we also were prevented from crossing the bridge. We found some of the bundles, but unfortunately none contained heavy weapons, rations or medical supplies.

We were isolated, Germans to the north and the south and, to the east, the Merderet River separated us from the main body of the 82nd Airborne Division. Soon we had casualties. The artillery support we were supposed to get, never came. Our wounded needed medical supplies and most importantly blood. Cpl. David Giblin volunteered, stripped, swam across the Merderet and was successful returning with the blood plasma. For this heroic action, he received the silver star. Another soldier shot a German in a vehicle, saw he was wearing a fancy hat and took it. On looking inside he found the label with the owner's name. It was a German General.

We stayed on Hill 30 until June 10, when finally the 90th Division passed in front of us. Our own regimental supply brought in new equipment and for the first time since England the 508 Parachute Infantry Regimental Combat Team was assembled.

There are numerous books about D Day and the battle on Hill 30 is well documented. I just want to recount the events where I was not a part of a unit. In Normandy, I spent 33 days in combat. Then we were brought back to England, reorganized and made ready to jump again which turned out to be in Holland. All in all I spent 168 days in combat.

74 - Ardennes, Battle of the Bulge

[illegible] December 1944, we were in Sissonne, France and were to be relieved for the winter. We were looking forward to some relaxing time, and on the night of December 15th I was at a movie. By the middle of the movie, the lights came on and we were ordered back to the barracks. The Germans had penetrated our line in Belgium at the Ardennes, and we were to be sent to battle. All night long we were issued weapons, ammunition, rubber-soled shoes, and winter clothes. There was great activity, so I made [illegible] and by morning we headed north and were driven to Montmedy. That night we slept in some barns.

On December 17th, we marched south past Carignan to some hills and reached Thiaucourt by December 19th. We were there to relieve the remainder elements of the 7th Armored, the 9th, and the 106th Infantry Divisions.

On the march up to the ridge, we made contact with the 106th Division Headquarters, which was about 10 miles from the southern troops. They were under very aggressive, [illegible] the enemy. We dug in, with the armored equipment.

From December 20th till December 24th, our units were in the ridge under the 7th, 106th, and 28th were withdrawing from their perfect position, leaving the ridge and moving back. All the while we had a contact with the Germans until we finally left on some older military [illegible] we had known the ridge and the Germans were [illegible] another one. They were in very [illegible] artillery.

I was in charge of the communication equipment and to keep it safe. Col. Holmes ordered me to move back along with everybody else about 8 miles to Dame-Jeanne-Sous-Villers. At that time the communication equipment was bulky and heavy, so Col. Holmes got me a jeep with a driver who was supposed to know the road to our destination. But, instead of driving across the fields, which would have been much safer, he took the road close to the German lines. All around us there was dust when things and the dusty bangs as the shells hit the ground. I didn't think we would ever make it, but again I was fortunate to come through in one piece.

My luck held all through the war. That night I slept in a barn, but the next night, for reasons I don't remember, I was in the open and the bars were down. Maybe some soldiers were smoking and we [illegible] line. We were ready to go forward and attack the Germans, but at that time we were under the command of Gen. Montgomery. He went to establish a defensive line. We stayed there till January 7th, when we moved again to the Thiaucourt Ridge to attack the Germans.

The 1st Battalion led the attack, followed by us, the 2nd Battalion. All the while we were under mortar fire and the 1st Battalion had many casualties. There were dead soldiers all over the field and the ones who survived were wounded, surrounded by the weather and terrain. By radio made it to the ridge, and we took positions. Meanwhile the quartermaster followed with the supplies. My jeep carried not only the communication equipment, but in the front of the jeep we had had a mine, a similar pipe, even [illegible] I was proud to have been born in this country and had for my parents two remarkable [illegible]. From my father, I inherited endurance, the capacity to work long and to adjust to new [illegible]. From my mother, I inherited enthusiasm, love of life and nature, and that positive [illegible] in me. When I was born, the century was still new. Now we are reaching the end. [illegible] is bigger with a population of great ethnic variety. But the [illegible] still lives on. Long before President Kennedy asked the individual to do something [illegible], we in New Hyde Park reached out to our neighbors, helped the disadvantaged and [illegible] our village a better place, other villages followed, we'd have a great country.

35 - Epilogue
